STATE-OWNED CABLES.
A very lively question among commercial men in Great Britain is the powerful monopoly that controls a large proportion of the cables which connect the world's great cities and her colonies. Last month the question of "Imperial Telegraphic Communication" was discussed by the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce. The principal speaker was Sir Edward Sassoon, M. P., who is connected with a special Parliamentary committee on Imperial telegraphy. The rates of the cable companies, the reasonable, when the Enterprise was in its infancy, Mr. Sassoon declared, were now, in view of the phenomenal increase of business, wholly antiquated and intolerable. It was prophetic to think that the electric fluid, the heaven-sent outcome of natural laws and physical science, was forever to remain in the cast-iron possession of a single group of men. The agitation for relief is concerned principally with the cable companies. The whole matter is discussed editorially and otherwise in The British Trade Review. In international and inter-imperial commerce the subject of communication is of first importance. The Review suggests that one method of making this a better question in the House of Commons would be for the colonies to induce their respective Legislatures to bring the necessary pressure to bear upon the home authorities. The Review goes on to say: "Our colonies and possessions probably never had such influence with the Imperial authorities as they have at the present time. They are daily giving evidence that their association with Great Britain is nothing less than a vital one, and this being the case, it is not only to be regretted, but to urge a great reform of an Imperial character, when it is shown that the absence of such reforms tends to restrict trade between the Mother Country and the colonies, and indirectly, if not directly, contributes to the loss of the British Empire." But to urge a great reform of an Imperial character, when it is shown that the absence of such reforms tends to restrict trade between the Mother Country and the colonies, and indirectly, if not directly, contributes to the loss of the British Empire.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S DUTY.
Counsel for the Gas Company, both legal and journalistic, are trying to convince the Government and the public that the proposed action against the company is not interference of the public. It is already pointed out that the Attorney-General should not interfere. The World has already pointed out that the Attorney-General in a case of this kind is his duty to do so. We quoted a case from the House of Lords reported the other day, in which the prerogative of the Attorney-General is respect was clearly defined. A legal gentleman used us to a very recent case in which the law is equally explicit. The case referred to is The Attorney-General v. The London & North Western Railway, reported in Law Reports, Queen's Bench, 1899. In this case, on an information, filed by the Attorney-General, on the relation of the County Council in whom the road was vested, for an injunction to restrain the company from allowing their trains to cross the level crossing at a speed greater than four miles an hour, it was held that the information was filed to enforce the express terms of an act of Parliament and not to enforce the judgment of the court. We quote some of the judgment of the court: "In these cases differ altogether from an action such as the present, which is an action to enforce the express terms of an act of Parliament. The Legislature having imposed certain conditions for the protection of the public, it is the duty of the court, on the application of the Attorney-General, on the relation of the County Council, to enforce the protection of the public rights in question, to enforce the express terms of the act." The right of the Attorney-General to apply to the courts for the enforcement of an act of Parliament is not called in question at all. The case is reported to show that when he does apply the courts are bound to enforce the express terms of any act of Parliament that has been violated. What the City of Toronto requests of the Attorney-General is that he shall, on the relation of the Corporation of the City of Toronto, which is the local authority charged with the protection of the public rights in question, apply to the courts to compel the Consumers' Gas Company to keep their books and accounts according to the express terms of the act of 1887. The case of the Attorney-General has no option but to proceed with the case at the instance of the city.

THE DUTCHMEN HAD A FEAST.
Englishmen, Scotchmen and Others Were Invited to Eat and Drink With Them.
THE WAR QUESTION WAS AVOIDED.
John S. Wise Talked About Dutch Civilization, But Steered Clear of Sore Spots.
New York, Jan. 18.—The annual dinner of the Dutch Society of New York was held at the Waldorf Astoria last night. There were present some 350 representative citizens, including delegates from St. George's, St. David's and other Dutch churches, and Scotch societies. It was expected that the dinner would be made by any of the speakers to the South African war, but this question was either avoided entirely or treated in an impartial manner. Mr. John S. Wise, in responding to the toast "Dutch Civilization," had this to say on the subject of the war: "When you hear me say that I am a peace man, you will not think I am a pacifist. I am a peace man because I believe in the power of the law. I believe in the power of the law to settle all disputes. I believe in the power of the law to maintain the peace of the world. I believe in the power of the law to bring about a better world than we have now. I believe in the power of the law to bring about a world in which there is no war.
