

CZAR OF RUSSIA REVISITS CAPITAL

He Attends Consecration of Church in Memory of Grandfather.

ROYAL PARTY WELL GUARDED

Representatives of the Civic Element Are Conspicuously Absent From Church Ceremony.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 1.—For the second time since "Red Sunday" (January 22, 1905), Emperor Nicholas today entered the capital to attend the consecration of a church erected as a memorial to his grandfather, Alexander II, who was assassinated in March, 1881, on the site of the new edifice. The date of the trip, coinciding with the conspiracy trial just closed here, plainly was designed to stimulate the loyalty of the army and the people. It was a complete success and no untoward incident occurred.

The police neglected no precaution to insure the safety of the emperor and even went so far as to thoroughly search the city and inspect the passports of suspicious individuals. Gendarmes were stationed in every window facing the route over which the imperial procession passed, and owners of houses were forbidden to open windows under pain of being fined. The bridge and river traffic was entirely suspended; the banks of the Neva were lined with marine guards and torpedo boats patrolled the river.

Emperor Comes Quietly.

The imperial party arrived from Peterhof unannounced, not a single salute being fired during their whole stay. The emperor and his party disembarked from a yacht at the admiralty and entered an inconspicuous launch, landing at the Duke Constantin's palace. Thence they proceeded the remainder of the way to the memorial church in carriages.

After two months of daily rains the day cleared and the sun shone on the brilliant scene of nearly 100 detachments of troops with widely varying uniforms stationed along the line of march. The emperor's arrival was announced by cheers from the troops, the public looking on indifferently. The big church yard, where the imperial party arrived, at the hour set for the function was picturesquely bordered by platoons of cuirassiers, grenadiers and dragons in multi-colored uniforms waving plumes, busbies and silver breastplates.

After walking around the church and saluting the guard the emperor entered the edifice at the south door. The scene inside was one of great splendor, recalling the old-time court halls. An abundance of light streaming through the lofty windows illuminated the four immense mosaic columns around which were grouped 2,000 representatives of the ruling classes. The emperor and the empress occupied the so-called patriarch's place at the right of the altar, where they were visible only from the diplomatic loge.

Stolypin Also Present.

Premier Stolypin was the only minister to attend the ceremony, all the others being abroad. Mr. Riddle, the American ambassador, and Sir Arthur Nicolson, the British ambassador, and the civic element were conspicuously absent, though millions of rubles were subscribed to the church fund by peasants and others who were not invited. The three walled loges of the church were lined with a double line of palace grenadiers and the entrances were guarded by veterans of the Russo-Turkish war.

The emperor seemed to be in excellent spirits, but the empress had the same care-worn, sad look which has often been remarked. The emperor wore a simple uniform with a dark blue tunic and trousers. Across his shoulders was the blue sash of St. Andrew. The empress was garbed in white silk and wore a white ostrich feather hat and a string of diamonds. She also wore the sash of St. Andrew. Both their majesties remained standing throughout the entire ceremony, which lasted three and a quarter hours, the empress slightly leaning on her parasol.

A characteristic part of the ceremony consisted of a solemn procession with the cross and banners embowered by an American, in which the emperor and his suite followed the clergy around outside the church, repeating a special liturgy.

CALVE IN LOVE

Or Perhaps Not as Prima Donna Is Not Certain Herself.

London, Sept. 2.—Calve, who is in France, still talks about her millionaire lover. She is much perplexed. She says that when she is away from him she feels that she "loves him so," but when he is near he bores her.

She has a very serious desire to exploit her own vineyard and will soon put on the market a wine with the label "Chateau Calvères" and the signature "Emma Calve."

She was advised to ask a high price for her wine on account of her celebrity, but prudently declined, saying, "No, that will suffice to launch it, but I must give people value for their money or they will not buy my wine at all."

Calve claims to be related to the Astor family. She says one branch went to the south of France, and the other went to America, and that the French branch from which she is descended became miners.

RAID SHIPS' PANTRIES

Strike-Breakers Seize Beer and Get Gloriously Drunk.

Peterboro, Sept. 2.—Passengers on 11 o'clock last night the captain of the steamer Cambroman, on which the English strike-breakers are quartered, sent an urgent message for police assistance. It appears that the Englishmen, apparently with the intention of taking part in yesterday's local celebrations, raided the ship's pantries, and after broaching 32 barrels of beer, drank the contents. They then seized a quantity of other drink and food and threw the stores of butter overboard.

To the remonstrance of the officers, the men replied with threats, and they afterward broke in the doors of the officers' cabins, taking possession of sixteen revolvers and a number of razors. When the police arrived they found the rioters lying about the deck, the majority of them overcome by drink. Thirty policemen remained all night on the ship with drawn revolvers. This morning the Englishmen posted up notices in their quarters demanding an increase of a shilling in their pay from tomorrow.

The number of strike-breakers at work today is very small, only 50 men having gone to the ship, and which they engaged from the Cambroman, where their companions are still under the influence of liquor. At 11 o'clock a telephone message was sent to the police, declaring that the men absolutely refused to go on board the tug, and that they were drinking and singing. The authorities were obliged to put several of them in irons. The police are still on board.

PEKSIAN PREMIER SHOT TO DEATH

Aminis Sultan Assassinated as He Was Leaving Assembly Chamber.

Teheran, Sept. 1.—Aminis Sultan, who was the present premier and minister of the interior, was shot dead Saturday night while leaving the assembly chamber. He received five shots and died on the spot. A soldier and a constable were also killed and a member of the assembly shot in the leg. One of the assassins committed suicide. The effect of this news on the interior where a condition of anarchy prevails, must be disastrous. It is doubtful if any Persian statesman can be induced to accept the vacant portfolio.

CHEKIB BEY HAS REAL FIGHT OUT

Turkish Legation Is Sleepless and Howls Unto the Police.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 1.—This tale hath to do with the adventures of Chekib Bey, vicar of his most illustrious magnificence, Abdul Hamid IV, successor to Mohammed, Eyes of the Son and Grand Vizier of Allah on earth, who was seized with a desire to roam.

And behold it was the night of the third day of the week—this is to say, Tuesday, And Chekib Bey came up from his ottoman and cast to the floor his cigarette and communed with himself, saying:

"I will go forth into this city of unbelievers by night even as the great Caliph Haroun Al Raschid was wont to do in his city of Bagdad, and I will cut a swath, yea, I will even see the lights."

And it was even so.

No word said he to the under-servants of his household, neither did he leave word of his destination, and it came to pass that midnight had come yet the illustrious servant of the "sick man of Europe" did not return. So that the people of his palace, even the inhabitants of the Turkish legation, waxed big with fear. Yea, and it came to pass that from every club the Nubian who made answer to inquiries did affirm that the magnificent Presence had not that night adorned the glittering haunts.

The watchmen at the desks of the caravansaries, who keep their vigil, so that impoverished guests shall not evade payment of their reckoning, spake the chief understrapper, "We will have not this night delighted our eyes by beholding the Glory of the Salt of the Earth."

"There is but one more chance," spake the chief understrapper. "We will even confide our woe to the police."

"We will seek him for ye," replied the night call of the force. "Rest ye in peace."

And lo! it waxed near on to morning, and the chimes had even tolled the hour of three, yet had Chekib Bey come neither, and the lamentations of the watchmen filled the house—yet, even unto the abode of the hours did they penetrate. And it availed nothing.

But secret emissaries had been sent broadcast by the night call of police, and they sought the Light of the Sun high and low. It came to pass the cock crowed four times, and in the east—yea, even towards Moscow—did the first faint streaks of the morning appear.

And behold, there was a brisk step on the pavement and sounds of searching for proper place resounded on the vestibule. And the satraps begat themselves as one to the entry and spread open the door and saluted. Yea, even three did they bow themselves to earth before the Vicar of the Invalid of Europe, for it was he, and with him as escort, so doth the saying go, were unbelievers, members of the finest:

For behold, they had found him. Yea, the illustrious prodigal had returned in state.

NEW BOOKS IN THE OLD COUNTRY

Queen Elizabeth and Leicester, Shakespeare and Napoleon in Writings.

London, Sept. 2.—Publishers are making rapid preparations for a busy autumn season, and already are well advanced in their announcement of new books. Memoirs always occupy a prominent place, and especially so this season.

The Duke of Argyll is to produce this year an account of his life through his own pen. It is entitled "The World at Eighteen," and the author, Miss Ray Costello, is just that age. It is the story of a young girl, fresh from a school in England, who finds herself suddenly, almost tragically, at war with the world about which she has read so much, but knows so little.

Mrs. Aubrey Richardson is producing through Werner Laurie a book entitled "A Lover of Queen Elizabeth," being a story of the life of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. We are told that her biography is not a contribution to the streams of whitewash with which many historians have plastered the doings of Queen Elizabeth, but that Mrs. Richardson gives Lord Leicester and the queen the benefit of all doubts to which their words and conduct give rise.

Romance on Shakespeare. "Shakespeare's Sweetheart," the title of a work by Miss Sarah Sterling which Chatto shortly will publish, seeks to reconstruct in the form of romance the story of Shakespeare's marriage with Ann Hathaway. Incidentally the author suggests several theories which are likely to give the book additional interest and not only to the ordinary reader but also to the Shakespearean student.

In Quiller-Couch's new story, "Major Vigoureux," which is about to appear with Methuen, the scene is laid in a group of islands lying in the Atlantic Ocean off the Cornish coast. It tells of a middle-aged officer left in charge of a deserted garrison and his tribulations and quarrels with the lord protector of the island and of a mysterious enemy who at first brought him much trouble but afterward great consolation.

Dies as Book Is Ended.

Every book has its history, and pathetic interest attaches to one which Fisher & Unwin are publishing. It is called "Bonaparte in Egypt and Egyptians of Today," and it bears the name of Hadji H. Browne as the author. He is an Irishman by birth, but has lived for many years as a Mohammedan among the Mohammedans. In fact, he made a pilgrimage disguised as a Turk to Mecca, and hence the name Hadji. Browne's life had been a romance and he died suddenly just as he had finished the book.

ROYAL PALACE TO LET

Here's a Rare Opportunity for Some American Millionaire.

London, Sept. 2.—American magnates, with their known love of the antique, will learn with interest that an English royal palace is to let as a place of residence. Here is a splendid opportunity for the millionaire who the other day announced his intention of settling down in England, and incidentally of winning the Derby.

The Old Palace at Richmond, which has come into the market, was formerly a part of the royal palace at Sheen, which is older than any building America can show, for it was formerly the home of Anglo-Saxon monarchs, and has a history almost as interesting as that of the Tower itself. Edward III. closed his long reign here in 1377, and after his death the palace was pillaged by his servants. Richard II., who Geoffrey Chaucer as his clerk wrote, added greatly to the building, and Edward IV. settled it on Queen Elizabeth. At the end of 1497 it was burnt down, but was rebuilt in 1501.

There is just the possibility that the next tenant may come across a rich hoard of gold, for when Henry VII. died at the palace in 1509 he left a treasure of the value of $30,000,000 hidden in the vaults. The last royal personage to reside at the palace was Queen Charlotte, to whom a lease was granted in 1817.

The Old Palace faces Richmond Green. It contains five reception rooms, two bedrooms, and two bathrooms, with stabling and coach houses in the Old Palace yard.

NOTHING LOOKS MORE UGLY than to see a person whose hands are covered with warts. Why have these disfigurements on your person when a sure remedy is at hand? Germany has taken great interest in her culture of recent years, and the crop is about 20,000 tons a year. Spain is a close second of the European countries.

The trouble was caused by three Indians, belonging to the Chemong band, who, it is alleged, secured some liquor at Burlington Falls on the return trip, and, until they were forcibly ejected from the boat at Buckhorn, they made life miserable for the other passengers on the steamer.

Muscular Christianity was given an exemplification during the disturbance. At Buckhorn, when an attempt was made to eject the troublesome Indians from the steamer Mr. Hopwood, of Chemong, stationed himself at the head of the stairs, and with a chair upraised, threatened to brain any Indian who tried to reach the deck.

One Indian succeeded in getting up, he did not stay long. Missionary Potter, a brother of J. C. Potter, of this city, who is in charge of the mission at Buckhorn, had taken his coat and hat off, when the trouble commenced, and he was on hand when the Indian eluded Mr. Hopwood and reached the deck. Taking the Indian by the back of the neck, he sent him down the steps quicker by a good deal, than he came up.

One of the Indians who saw the feat, and who was surprised at the ease with which his brother redman was handled, said to Mr. Potter, "Who are you, and at the reply, 'Oh, the preacher here.' He felt back surprised and pleased at the athletic ability shown by the 'sky pilot.'"

POLICE DOGS TRAIL THIEVES

Remarkable Sagacity Exhibited in Novel Contest in Paris Streets.

Paris, Sept. 2.—A novel contest was held in Paris this week, styled the "Concours International de Chiens de Police," its object being to test the sagacity of dogs employed to help the police in their duties. Among the tests for which marks were given were the following:

"At command the dog will march in front of his master, on follow him, and obey at a distance the directions given by voice or gesture."

"The dog will at command seek for and bring to his master an object hidden within a certain area by the judge."

"Fifteen points will be awarded for the dog which succeeds best in climbing palisades, and marks are also offered for long jumps and high jumps."

"To the dog which best protects any object left in its charge fifteen marks will be given."

"For attacking at command any person indicated by its master ten marks will be gained."

"For the dog which, immediately after being directed to attack a man, on a second command halts without touching the person, fifteen marks will be granted."

Ten dogs competed. Among their accomplishments were high jumps of over 6 feet, long jumps of 14 feet, climbing of walls, vigorous defense of their master against the attacks of hooligans and tracing the latter after their flight. How to knock a man down by running between his legs, and how to keep him on the ground with vigorous blows of the muzzle, are acts in which all the competitors were perfect.

A man who played the role of hooligan, brandished a stick and fired a pistol, was foremost by the winning animal's clever attack. The dog, Athos, a black Belge, collie, found the hooligan when he hid in a tub, and pursued him over the slates when he took refuge on a roof. Other competitors ran the winner close in similar maneuvers.

Athos has developed a new method of attack, which, his owner says, has never yet failed. Instead of flying at the throat or seizing the leg, he hurries himself head foremost at that part of his opponent's anatomy known to the fraternity as the "wind." The result is said to be rather more effective than a knockdown blow with the fist. The trials took place in the Velodrome d'iver.

EARL'S FAMILY NEAR THRONE

Late Lord Dunmore's Ancestor Once Close to Gaining Crown.

London, Sept. 2.—The late Lord Dunmore's prominence as a Christian Scientist and his adventurous travels in his earlier days so filled the notices of his life that no room was found for the fact that at one time his family came near the throne.

His great-grandfather, the fourth earl, who was governor of Virginia when England lost the American colonies and who commemorated the event by christening his son "Virginia" and his daughter Virginia, had a daughter Augusta. She married in 1793 the Duke of Sussex, a son of George III. They were married in Rome with some idea, it is said, of evading the royal marriage act, which was then a new thing, but, of course, there was no escape from the act, and they remarried a few months later at St. George's in Hanover Square, but nothing availed them and the marriage could not be recognized.

The duke, so the story goes, was bent at first on refusing to surrender, but he was deeply in debt. He was a most unfortunate prince, for as sure as he was appointed to rangerish of parks and such like office the office was doomed to be deprived of its salary.

Therein lay the undoing of this marriage. Gossip said that the prince offered to get his debts paid if he would repudiate the marriage. That may be malice, but repudiated it certainly was.

There were two children, who grew up as Colonel and Mademoiselle D'Este. The duke's line had failed, Colonel D'Este IV, Lord Dunmore's grand-

PLAIN TALK FROM THE DOCTOR

A prominent physician, famous for his success in the treatment of kidney and bladder troubles, stated that to the following prescription is due a great deal of his success:

One ounce fluid extract dandelion;
One ounce compound salutaria;
Four ounces compound syrup sarsaparilla.
Mix and take a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime, drinking plenty of water.

This mixture will, he says, positively cure any diseases arising from weak, clogged or inactive kidneys, and will assist these organs to cleanse the blood of the poisonous waste matter and acids, which if allowed to remain, cause lumbago, lame back, rheumatism and sciatica, and at the same time will restore the kidneys to healthy normal action. The ingredients, which are purely vegetable and entirely harmless, can be procured from any good druggist and mixed at home at very little cost. This advice will undoubtedly be much appreciated by many readers.
