Asks Irish M. P.'s for United Support for Government in Plan to Carry Home Rule Bill Into Law—Mr. Redmond Sees Day of Misunderstanding at End

London, March 2.—Winston Churchill, presiding at a dinner of the Eighty Club, last night in honor of John Redmond, referred to Ireland's long struggle for home rule and said that Mr. Redmond and the Liberal party, after this long pilgrimage had reached the threshold of success. It was the highest importance that all Irishmen who had fought for the home rule cause should stand together. It would be an embarrassment and a source of perplexity to many of those whose good will and support might be won throughout the length and breadth of England if there appeared to be, among ardent home rule friends, which to outsiders might appear to be easily removed. "We hope that at this supreme moment in the fortunes of the Irish and British peoples," said Mr. Churchill, "that Ireland will speak with a united voice and that the government will not hesitate to make to carry the home rule bill into law."

It was subsequently ascertained that the end of the shaft of the horse had "stripped" and remained in the bore. 5.—The same authority states that it has been notified that, in some instances, officers of corps undergoing training in a camp of instruction do not attend for more than a few days, that as the course of training in camps is progressive, unless an officer follows the syllabus from day to day, he is likely to become as much of a hindrance as a help in carrying out of instruction of those under his command. It is therefore, it is found that any officer of this unit is only able to proceed to camp for a few days, a recommendation should be put forward that he should be relieved altogether from annual training for the year and thus avoid the expense entailed for his transport to and from camp, for no benefit is derived, so far as the training of his unit or himself is concerned, by his attendance at camp for a short period only.

6.—The annual meeting will be held at the Union Club on Saturday, 9th March, at 8 p. m. Reports of regimental and band committees must be in the hands of the adjutant not less than three days previous to the meeting.
