THE LAST KISS.

There was no light in the room but the ruddy gleam of the hickory logs in the wide chimney, and there was needed no further flumination than their fitful glow.

Wax candles or chandeliers would have been out of place in the snug little parlor, where rose geraniums filled the windows and red berried holly sprigs framed the

She would have looked no lovelier in dia-She would have looked no lovelier in diamonds or point d'alencon.

Frank Ashton, standing before her in the bright reflection of the fire, was not what women call handsome. Dark and strongly built, with careless brown masses of hair, and gray blue eyes—this was his photograph; yet Fanny Orme had rejected all the village exquisites to nestle at last in the brave, honest heart of Frank Ashton.

Just at present, however, to judge from appearances, the course of true love was not running in its smoothest channel. Frank looked grave, and Fanny's rose red lips were curved in a very gentle pout.

"Now, Fanny, don't be cross!" said the young soldier, and he took her hand caressingly. It was drawn away, however, with a decided jerk.

"It's too bed!" said the queen of hearts.

"All the other girls are going, and it will be the last, last sleigh ride we shall have together."

"Well, why don't you go without me,
Fan? I'll promise not to be jealous!"
"Without you? Indeed, no! But, Frank,

you will go!"

"No, Fanny," he said, with a resolute firmness. "I love you dearly, but none the less must I be true to duty. You know that Allen Thorn is the dearest friend I have. You know that he lies at the point of death. I have promised to watch with him this night. I could find no substitute to undertake the charge, even were I to at-tempt it. Fanny, love, don't ask me to do

There was a touch on his arm. He turned, scarce able in the purple dawn gloom to see who was at his side, "Harry Orme, is it you?"
"She would make me come!" laughed the young man. "Here, Fanny, you can finish the business for yourself."

Two Detroit women met the other morning on the street, and with a common impulse they began to talk about hired help. "Have you got a girl yet?" asked one. "I've had about a dozen in the last month, and they are no good. The cap sheaf was lead on though yesterday."

"How was that?" came the eagerly curious interruption.
"Well, a very stylish girl of about 30 called at noon to see about a place. I liked her looks, though she was dressed better than I was, but I thought as she was so particular about her clothes she'd be nice every other way. Of course she was haughty and proud, but lots of untidy ones were that way, so I overlooked that, too, and I had practically engaged her when what do you think she wanted?"
"Six nights off and two afternoons for matinees?" suggested the other one.
"No, not that. Would you believe it? She wanted an extra room for her maid to occupy. Now what do you think of that?" and the other one dropped her power of thinking.—Detroit Free Press. "How was that?" came the eagerly curi

"No. 16 related to me how and why she occupied the shack. It was rather a romantic story, but yet one full of sadness from beginning to end.

"My father,' said No. 16, in a voice full of pathos, 'is a Scotchman, and is factor of Fort Pelley, belonging to the Hudson's Bay company. Before the Northwest territories were taken over, he ruled the country for hundreds of miles around. He was a magistrate, too, and of course administered the law.

"When Scotland was reached she entered a university and remained there until she graduated. These were pleasant days for the young western girl. She became acquainted with an intelligent young Scotchman, and the attachment became so strong on both sides that before she left the land of heather for the wilds of Canada they had plighted vows.

"One of the company's ships bore her away from her pleasant associations in Scotland to the higher latitudes of Davis straits and the Hudson's bay, where the iceberg is familiar in August, there again to rough it over fords and stretches of swamps, up vast water courses,

"Here was an obstacle that she did not count upon. She debated the subject with her father, and finally asserted her prerogative of ecepting as her husband the man she had chosen, while the father was just as determined that she should marry the man he had chosen.

"Thus matters stood for a long time It was impossible for her to let the young man in Scotland know how matters were. In the meantime, however, he had determined to reach the Northwest. "He came and made his way to Fort Garry, where he joined a party who

Even if he could, there was no means for a young man like him to gain a livelihood. The forts held all the necessaries of life, and none could be purchased elsewhere. Then, again, there was the danger of being killed by strangling bands of Indians.

"With reluctance he turned his back to Fort Pelley and all it contained that was dear to him. He retraced his steps as best he could, and reached the border of the United States, where all trace of him was lost forever, so far as No. 16 was concerned.
