Is Shamrock III. of British Design?

An interesting statement having source among Scotchmen, is to the effect that "in her design the Shamrock III. is distinctly British. The heresy of the scow has been cast saide." As a matter of fact a stern view of the new challenger shows a better scow model than Columbia can boast, and it is at worst as good as that of Constitution. The breadth of beam on deck has been carried aft in graceful lines and the underwater lines brought up too in exact scew fashion. In fact, the most interesting feature of the ship is the stern, because in that view she looks most dangerous. The reports that she leaves the water even at high speed with but a tiny ripple are undoubtedly true. There is no joke in those reports. And when she is heeled to her sailing lines in, 82y, a ten-knot breeze she will carry the to windward are no doubt true and her
