THE LAUGHTER OF LIFE

AND A VERY INTERESTING ONE.

Copyright 1908

By MARIA ALBANESI

"How do you do, Lord Carlingford?
You are, aren't you? Please forgive me if I am just a little doubtful.
Surely, when we said good-bye two days ago you told me you were going to Scotland?"

"Cringleford laughed.
"I thought so at the time, but I found that Scotland could wait; and as I had a chance of coming down into this neighborhood, I decided to take it. I hope you are going to say that you're glad to see me, Miss Heron-worth?"

"Oh, of course; that's the sort of thing people are always expected to say, isn't it?"

There was the usual pretty laughing note in Drusilla's voice, but not quite the usual composure in her manner. She turned involuntarily to Drusilla's face and saw that she was ready out of sight.

He noted, too, that Bob, the fox terrier, had galloped after him. It gave Drusilla the faintest suggestion of annoyance to realize that this particular dog should desert her so readily.

You mustn't let me keep you standing here," said Lord Carlingford.
"Oh, I am just home. Is that your own car?" asked Drusilla.

"No; I sent mine up north last week.
This is a hard one, and rather a rummable affair. The people with whom I am staying haven't run to a motor just yet, so I had to do the best I could with the available car in the neighborhood."

With just the faintest touch of restation in her manner Drusilla said:
"I'll go with you. I'll be glad to have you and your car."

"Only, you know," he said, when the car had been dismissed and they were walking on together, "I didn't really mean to burst in on you in this fashion. As a matter of fact, I hardly dared hope for the good luck of seeing you so soon, but I could not resist the temptation of taking a spin in this direction. Won't you let me carry your parcel?"

She laughed as she transferred the packet she carried to his charge.
"That looks as if it contained a small blanket," she said, "and there's nothing larger than postcards 'aside.
I started out with the full intention of posting them and forgot all about it, you see. I made all sorts of promises to the Deravan children when I left them yesterday, and being a ver-tuous person, I began at once to keep up with my promises."

"The Deravan children are not the only ones who have promises made them," said the young man tenderly and quietly.

Drusilla laughed and blushed.
"How do you know," she asked, that a postcard is not now on its way to Scotland?"

He looked at her suddenly and eagerly.

"Did you write?" he asked. "Have I missed your letter?"

She stopped once again to whistle to the dogs. It was so ridiculous of her that she should feel so nervous.

"Well, I might have written," she said; "only as you forgot to give me your address, you see I couldn't." She hurried on into a safer channel.

"Beth, my sister, will be so pleased to meet you."
"Is she like you?" asked Lord Carlingford.

Drusilla shook her head.
"Oh, dear no. Beth is just everything that I am not! She is sweet, and good, and true, and beautiful; at least she is beautiful to me. I have only a hazard of my mother; and although Beth is not so very many years older, she has taken care of me ever since I remember."

Lord Carlingford made no reply in words, but Drusilla felt his eyes upon her.

AMUSEMENTS

A GREAT SHOW AT H. H. H.
"I'd give ten cents any time to see either one of these pictures, they're the best I've ever seen." A gentleman who was present at the H. H. H. last evening came to the box office, and made the above remark. The pictures he referred to were "The Letter-Box," a brand new Biograph picture drama of Puritan days. The other was "The Jilt," which is shown as an extra, and repeated at the request of hundreds, some of whom missed it last week, while others wanted to see it again. The story revolves around the question, "Was a woman the right thing, if so, how was she to be the same right?" It's the strongest drama yet presented by the Biograph Co.
Barred Making in France is a decidedly interesting and instructive picture, and it's marvellous to see how they are made with no tools except a saw, hammer and hatchet. The First and Last Experience of a Lady Juggler kept the crowd in raptures, and is the best comedy shown here for some time. Marie Genard, the dainty little dancer, is receiving great applause at each show.
