HOME HAPPY WEDDINGS

Fashionable Wedding at Rothesay Yesterday and Numerous Nuptial Events Soicmized in This City.

A brilliant society wedding took place in St. Paul's church, Rothesay, at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when Miss Grace Elizabeth Robertson, daughter of the late David D. and Mrs. Robertson of The Cottage, Rothesay, and grand-daughter of the late Sir William Ritchie, who was chief justice of Canada, was united in marriage to George E. E. Nichols, barrister, of Halifax, N. S.

The church edifice was very beautifully decorated for the occasion and many friends of the bride were present from St. John and elsewhere. The bride was given away by her uncle, R. R. Ritchie, high sheriff of the city and county of St. John.

The ceremony was performed by the Lord Bishop of Nova Scotia, the Right Rev. C. F. Worrell, assisted by Rev. A. W. Daniel, rector of Rothesay. The bridesmaids were: Miss G. D. Robertson, Miss Madge Robertson, sisters of the bride, and Miss A. S. Brock, and the groomsmen were George C. Farrish, of Halifax, N. S.

The bride was charmingly gowned in white satin draped with old hollon lace, while the bridesmaids wore gowns of cream net with lilac unton tulle overbusses, cream tregal hats with lilac ribbons and pink roses and carried bouquets of orchids and pink roses.

The ushers were:—J. W. P. Ritchie and J. W. Willis, of Halifax, Percy L. Fairweather and H. P. Thornhill, of Rothesay.

A handsome array of gifts testified to the esteem in which the bride and groom are held by their friends. The bridesmaids received from the groom, gold bracelets, and the ushers were the recipients of waist coat button sets as gifts from the bride.

Among the guests were:—Lady Ritchie, of Ottawa; Miss Ritchie, Mr. and Mrs. Hazen Ritchie and Miss J. W. Ritchie, of Halifax; Mrs. James H. Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. T. E. G. Lynch and Miss Agnew.

Mr. and Mrs. Nichols left last evening for Montreal and Quebec, and will sail for England on their wedding trip, returning to Halifax, where they will make their home.

Stepler-Verinder.
 The home of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Verinder, 13 Richmond street, was the scene of a pretty, though quiet event, yesterday afternoon, when their daughter, Louisa S., was united in marriage to William A. Stepler, manager of the W. A. Stepler Co. of this city. Rev. R. P. McKim officiated. The couple were unattended and only members of the families and intimate friends witnessed the ceremony. The bride was prettily attired in a handsome white princess gown and carried a large bouquet of roses. The presents were numerous and costly, and included a large beaten brass jardiniere and fern from the Exmouth street Methodist Church choir, of which Miss Verinder had been an untiring member for a number of years; a handsome cut glass pitcher from the bachelor girls' society of the same church, silver scallop dish and cut glass fruit dish from the empress of China. A. Lid; a purse of gold and Japanese china set from the bridegroom's mother, and other presents from friends in Guernsey, England, South Africa, the United States and the city.

The ceremony over a luncheon was partaken of by those present after which the bridal party drove in automobiles to the depot, where the happy couple took train for Boston, New York, Niagara and Upper Canadian cities, where the honeymoon will be spent.

Turban of All Lace

The lace craze has struck the milliners hardest of all. It's lace, lace, lace everywhere. In huge boucs on broad hats, in trim facings, in crown coverings, and now it appears as a whole hat. As a covering for the summer hat to wear with summer dresses there will be nothing prettier than white all-over lace. And the featherly airt fastened on with the beaded large headed pin is the only trimming needed.

ROOSEVELT NOT AN MENACE TO HIS WIFE PARTNER WITH HUSBAND

Naval Qualities are Uppermost and Enable Him to Win Popular Esteem—No Caesarism in His Blood.

It is by moral qualities that Theodore Roosevelt has rendered his best service to the country, says the New York Journal of Commerce, and it is these that save him from being regarded as in any way dangerous to free and representative government. He is not only patriotic, but he is democratic. He is a believer in popular government. He has confidence in the people and relies upon them for support, and hence they have confidence in him, believing that he will not consciously betray their interests.

Too much trust in the people is apt to beget demagogism and too much trust in a man is apt to beget hero worship, and both are perilous qualities; but there is an effective antidote to that danger where the dominant trait in the leader or the popular hero is a strong moral sense of his conscience and courage are the chief elements. There is no Caesarism in the blood of Roosevelt, and there would be no submission to his display in the American people. Whatever his future may be as a public man, there is no reason to doubt that it will be devoted to strengthening and not subverting the free institutions of his country.

A man with such characteristics is very likely to be overrated in his own time, and an accurate expression of his worth is constantly attracts to himself and the admiration or the wonder that he evokes. But, if Theodore Roosevelt is not a strong constructive statesman or the surest guiding spirit of a great nation, if it is overrating him to rank him among the greatest of American Presidents, it is still true that he rendered an exceptional service to the country at a time when it was most needed, and a service that bids fair to be of enduring and inestimable value to the republic.

By that strong moral sense of his and the faculty of giving it energetic and courageous expression in words and action, he aroused the people to an appreciation of insidious dangers to which they had seemed too indifferent, dangers in politics and in official life. He denounced abuses and corruption and grappled with evils that were strongly entrenched, and he set in motion forces that gave a new impulse and a new direction to the currents of progress.

Such a man is liable to commit errors of judgment, and to fall short in the practical application of his principles, and it is probable that he would fall in great constructive tasks. Roosevelt has been put to supreme test, but what he has done and what he is, before the world and in the eyes of men, is enough to account for his popularity at home and abroad at this stage of his career.

Buchanan-Clark.
 The residence of Mr. E. A. Goodwin, Mount Pleasant avenue, was the scene of a very pretty wedding yesterday morning, when Miss Elizabeth Clark, daughter of the late A. P. Clark, was united in marriage to Mr. Melvin Colbrook Buchanan of Buchanan Bros., St. Stephen. Rev. Dr. Raymond was the officiating clergyman.
 The bride was handsomely attired in a travelling suit of electric blue, with hat to match. After partaking of a wedding breakfast, the happy couple left by the Prince Rupert to spend their honeymoon in Nova Scotia. On their return they will reside in St. Stephen.
Piers-Goddard.
 The marriage of Miss Zola Goddard and Wesley Piers, both of whom are natives of St. John, took place at Somerville, Mass., Friday evening, June 17. The wedding which took place at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Alexander McKillop, was one of the prettiest of the season. The house was handsomely decorated with cut flowers and palms.
 The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. N. Chamberlain of Somerville.
 The bride wore a gown of blue satin and carried a large bouquet of white chrysanthemums.
 After the wedding supper was served the guests, and the young couple retired amid showers of rice and confetti.

COME IN WATER IS FINE

Second Article on Swimming Without a Teacher--Details of Movements and Their Continuation.

Article II.
 To learn the arm movements of the breast stroke the beginner should proceed as follows:
 Stand with the water up to the level of the armpits. The hands should then be brought in front of the chest with the palms kept downwards, close to the surface, and with the fingers held together and touching each other. The hands are next shot forward until the arms are fully extended; the palms are then turned outward, and both arms are swept round simultaneously still only a few inches above the surface of the water, until they reach a point almost in a direct line with the shoulders. The palms should then be flattened, and the elbows bent quickly, so that they are brought close to the side of the body in position to recommence the stroke.

The leg stroke should then be attempted. At first a stationary object or a friend's hand should be grasped in both hands, and the body allowed to float upwards from the bottom, until it lies only a few inches below the surface. The head should rest on the water with the chin partly immersed. The feet should then be drawn well up towards the body by the action of opening and widening out the knees. When this is done correctly it will be found that the soles of the feet almost touch the surface, and are resting but a few inches below it. It is important to take care that the knees are not drawn underneath the body. And as soon as the correct position has been assumed, the legs should be kicked apart, and brought backwards to the first position, assumed with as powerful a stroke as possible. While apart the legs will have inclined on two sides a body of water shaped like an inverted V, and when this is forced out by their coming together, one finds one's body being propelled forward.

The movements should first be performed easily and without haste or stiffness. The feet should be drawn up first, then the legs should be swiftly extended; and whilst they are moving, the forward part of each and particularly of each foot be swept round, and the limbs brought together. The sweeping movements of the legs are accompanied by a peculiar action of the knees which takes place when straightening the leg; it gives greater power to the stroke, but can only be acquired by practice.

Not that some confidence has been acquired you should lose no time in boldly attempting to combine the two sets of arms and leg movements. Standing again in water about breast deep near to and facing the shore, she should be drawn forward, the surface of the water with arms in the first position, viz., stretched out in front of her to the fullest extent, and should then allow her legs to float off the bottom. The arms should then be swept around and backward until each hand is opposite the point of the shoulder at a right angle to the body, care being taken to make the stroke at an even depth about six or eight inches below the surface of the water. A deep breath should be taken as the elbows are folded up so as to bring the hands to the front of the chest.

The legs should then be shot out forward and brought together, so that when the arms are fully extended the body is lying horizontal with the legs almost closed. When the learner has accomplished these movements properly she will have advanced appreciably forward toward the shore. The continued movements should be practised several times, and then the swimmer may retire still further into the water.

It must, however, be remembered that practice should never be carried to the point of fatigue.
 The side stroke should be learned by everyone as soon as the breast stroke has been properly mastered. It is divided, strictly speaking, into three parts; firstly, the upper right arm stroke (we are now assuming that the swimmer is on her left side); secondly, the under or left arm draw; and thirdly, the leg stroke. It must be noted that the "feathering" i.e., turning of the hands, is a matter of the greatest importance, as by doing this properly one is able to push them forward with the least possible resistance to the water, and thereby avoid reducing one's speed and checking one's progress.

The correct position of the body is not quite on its side, but just a trifle inclined on the chest—indeed, only sufficiently for the upper arm (whether left or right, as the case may be) to work clear of the trunk. The face should be immersed so that the upper nostril is just clear of the water. The proper moment for breathing is when the under arm is drawn back, and the time for exhaling the breath is when the arms are shot forward.

When about to combine the leg and arm movements, and thus swim by using the side stroke, the swimmer should start off with a chest stroke, and as the arms are brought back she should turn over on her side, in the position we have described. The legs must then be drawn up, the upper one crossing over the lower, with both knees well bent, the upper one in a similar position to that assumed in the breast stroke, whilst the other is pressed back, with the foot pointing in the same direction as the upper, and close under the surface. A wide sweep must now be taken with the legs, the upper one being only a few inches below the surface of the water, and as the sweep is made the hands should be shot out above the head to the fullest extent.
 The under arm ought then to reach further to the front than the upper, and counting one after the legs have come together so as to allow of the full benefit being derived from the stroke, the learner will make the next movement (No. 2) with the upper arm while the legs remain extended at full length with the toes pointing backwards. This should be done whilst the under arm is still fully extended in front. As soon as the stroke is completed by the upper arm, and the fingers reach to a position near the thigh, the left or under arm takes up its work (No. 3), and the legs are drawn up as the arm approaches the ribs, so as to be in the correct position for a fresh kick. If these movements have been properly carried out, and accurately timed to work in unison with one another, the two hands will come into position again simultaneously, ready to be shot forward once more.

Tomorrow's article will treat briefly of the less common strokes and more fully of floating and diving.
 (To be Concluded.)
