Fashions for the Boy. Styles for little boyhood are just as decided and just as attractive as styles for tiny girlhood and only the mother of a little lad knows how these juvenile fashions change from season to season.

Elaborate Coiffure. Possibly it is not a well known fact that the French mannequins start all new coiffures for the world follows them in exact also, for often the mannequins exaggerate the coiffures in order to bring them to the attention of the onlooker.

Those Cracks in Your Floor. Even a bad floor has possibilities. And since all-over carpet has ceased to be in first style, we have to make the best of whatever kind of a floor we have.

Make a paste of 1 pound of flour, 3 quarts of water and 1 tablespoonful of alum. This should be mixed and boiled until smooth. In this paste put newspapers to soak, soaking very thoroughly. When the mixture is ready for use, it should be of the consistency of putty.

REDMOND POINTS TO DANGER IN FORCING COMPULSORY SERVICE BILL ON IRELAND

NATIONALIST LEADER SAYS HIS OPINIONS REGARDING GOVERNMENT OF IRELAND HAVE BEEN OVERBORNE AND WARNS AGAINST INCLUDING COUNTRY IN CONSCRIPTION PROPOSAL — PREMIER ASQUITH BOMBARDED WITH QUESTIONS REGARDING ARRESTS AND EXECUTIONS IN IRELAND.

London, May 9.—Executions and arrests in Ireland were again discussed in the House of Commons this afternoon in the form of questions to Premier Asquith. William O'Brien, Nationalist member for the city of Cork, asked whether the premier was aware that hundreds of men from Cork and Tipperary had been arrested without any charge being stated, and were confined in the Cork jail, where they were treated with the utmost harshness.

Mr. Redmond proceeded to declare it unfair to leave the impression that Ireland had not done well in recruiting. She had more than 150,000 men now with the colors, men who had displayed bravery and covered themselves with glory, said the Nationalist leader. He opposed conscription for Ireland because he believed conscription the worst possible way to get men in Ireland, and after recent events his deliberate opinion was that it would be not only wrong, but a high insane to attempt to enforce conscription, and it would be a fearful responsibility, if in the face of this deliberate opinion, Ulster men should persist in the attempt to force conscription upon Ireland.

Mr. Redmond besought the house, not only for the sake of Ireland, but for the sake of the Empire, not to proceed with this course. "Nobody is more anxious than I," he continued, "to respond to the Ulster appeal for co-operation. I have hoped against hope, and hope still, even in the dark, miserable circumstances of the moment, that we might come together. Aye, and before long I hope, with all my heart, that out of these miseries we may be able, by taking a large, generous view, something like a statesmanlike and far-reaching view of the Empire's highest interests, that out of this turmoil and tragedy we may evolve some means of putting an end to these differences so that we may have a united Ireland where the people of the government have both power and responsibility."

Winston Spencer Churchill considered that Mr. Redmond had rendered the greatest service to the Empire, and that Great Britain owed a deep debt to the Nationalist party for their exertions in the present struggle, "the first struggle," said Col. Churchill, "in which Ireland has been a valiant friend on our side."

He would feel the same reluctance, he declared, in pressing an Irish question against Mr. Redmond's opinion as he would feel against pressing a South African against the opinion of Gen. Botha.

"The whole future of Ireland," he continued, "depends upon two men, Sir Edward Carson and Mr. Redmond, and there is no difficulty they cannot surmount if they act together. It is understood that Col. Churchill has decided to resume politics. His battalion at the front has ceased to exist through being absorbed by another unit, and he has obtained leave until further orders."

Red Cross Exhibit. The local Red Cross Society is making an exhibit of the supplies that have been and are being shipped to the front through Red Cross channels. The windows of the Royal Hotel, through the courtesy of Mr. William Raymond have been placed at the disposal of the society for the present week, and it is hoped by this publicity to show many citizens who have not been at the Depot on Chipman Hill, just what Red Cross supplies are and how they are packed and shipped to the hospitals and to those societies who use Red Cross goods.

Shell Makers Strike Ended. Majority of 15,000 Employees in Westinghouse Plant at Pittsburg Returned to Work Yesterday.

Pittsburg, May 9.—The strike of 15,000 electrical and Manufacturing Company at East Pittsburg ended today, when there was a rush of strikers to enter the plants as soon as the gates were opened. President E. M. Herr refused all the demands, and told the strikers' committee late yesterday that unless all employees were in their places this morning they would have to be re-employed, and would lose all the benefits accruing to them under the company's pension and pension system.

The strike, which was called April 22, was to enforce an eight-hour day, and according to the company, cost the workmen $1,397,000 in wages.

BILINGUALISM BROUGHT UP IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Resolution Introduced Yesterday by Grit Member—Question Likely to Prove Rock on Which Old Liberal Party Will be Wrecked and Laurier's Exit as Leader a Possibility.

Special to The Standard. Ottawa, May 9.—The Liberal party in Canada seems to be on the eve of a revolution. A number will stand by their convictions and are prepared to come out against Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but very many of the Liberal members of parliament are behind the bilingual resolution which is now before the House and which has been held over until tomorrow until the Speaker decides the question of order raised as to whether such a matter can be introduced into discussion of the federal parliament.

It had been thought for some time that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was opposed to the introduction of any discussion upon bilingualism into the federal arena, posing, as he has always done, as the champion of the rights of the provinces, but today all doubts were set at rest and the old champion of provincial rights exhibited himself before the House as desirous of bringing before parliament that most sacred of the rights of the province, education. Ontario has said that an English-speaking province she will remain. The stranger who comes within her gates from the province of Quebec, and who speaks any language is welcome, but when he comes he must come with the knowledge that he has entered an English-speaking province. He can have his children taught through the medium of the French language until they have had an opportunity of learning English, after which they must be schooled in the language of the province.

Means End of Old Liberal Party. Propagandists took up the cry against the legislature of Ontario a year or two ago, and the propaganda spread into the province of Quebec where the people are now being taxed on the authority of the legislature, English and French alike, to provide funds to fight the people of Ontario on the question. From a propaganda to a political question is a short step, and now it is found that the bilingualists are lined up with the Liberal party headed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It will be almost a solid Quebec, of course, and if the situation means anything at all it is that the old Liberal party is almost at the end. The new Liberal party is a French party with a few English-speaking Liberals thrown in. The French Liberals are raising the issue themselves. The French Conservatives, with but few exceptions, are staying by the constitution. It is a real crisis with no one knowing now that it has begun, where it is all going to end. It threatens the cohesion of the people of Ontario half a century ago. It means, if it is not checked at once, that Confederation on the lines laid down has been a failure.

It seems to be too late to stop the movement. It has been growing in intensity for months. Even the Speaker of the Senate has been one of those responsible for the fight in the House. It has been told amongst the French population with the gleam of malicious untruth. What is to be the outcome is mere speculation but that it is regarded seriously by responsible statesmen is undeniable.

The situation has been up to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. No man has such influence in the province of Quebec as he has. But instead of exerting it in the cause of truth and peace he has remained silent until the wave of unrighteous anger of the French against their English fellow Canadians has assumed alarming proportions. Today he is on the crest of that wave, British and French alike, and he has his hands on her hands. Instead of leading the recruiting in his native province he is leading schism and racial and religious feud. This is his old age gift to Canada which has honored him as it has honored few men.

Forebodings Laurier's Exit? It is said by some that this action on the part of the Liberal chieftain presages his departure from political life and some words he uttered seem to bear this out. "I dwell amongst mine own people," he said, "and to them I am prepared to go if that must be the price of my affection."

If this should be the outcome there will be no surprise. In fact it is learned that the English speaking Liberals are already discussing a possible successor. The names of E. M. MacDonald, Dr. Michael Clarke and Hon. Frank Oliver are most prominently mentioned, although one or two seem for the information of the House. "If my honorable friend is determined," he continued, "to precipitate a debate which, so far as I can see, can do no possible good, and in my judgment may do an indefinite amount of harm, it might be well that Mr. Speaker should have some time to consider the point of order. It might be well that my honorable friend from Kamouraska may have an opportunity for a little more reflection and consideration, that this motion should stand until tomorrow."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier contended that the point of order was not well taken. There was, he said, an abundance of precedents against it. In years gone by resolutions in favor of the home rule for Ireland had been presented and adopted three to four times within his recollection. It is never a more than one occasion, the British Parliament had been moved by Mr. Gladstone, among others, to consider the treatment of Christian populations in the Orient. Sir Wilfrid said that he supposed that many questions would be raised as to the power of the House to consider or pass such a resolution, he could have armed himself with any number of precedents. "As to the wisdom, or otherwise, of this motion," continued Sir Wilfrid, "may I say to my right honorable friend, the prime minister, that for my part, I have another and a totally different view from the one which he has expressed. Everybody knows that there is in this province at the present time a widespread agitation with regard to the rights of the French language in this Dominion. It is never a wise thing to run away from a question. I address myself to the common sense and spirit of fairness of my fellow countrymen of the Province of Ontario and I repeat here, that we have nothing to gain by running away from the question. Let us discuss it like men; let us discuss it like the British subjects that we are, I speak here, as a member of the minority, but no one is prouder of his British rights than I am myself, and I can appeal to my forty years in this House to justify what I now say. There is nothing to be gained by running away from this question. Let us discuss it; let us hear both sides of it and then, I believe that from this discussion we will rise wiser and better men knowing better what our position is, knowing better what the rights of the minority are. And I venture to say that when the question has been settled, as it ought to be settled, the minority will accept the situation whatever it may be."

Hon. T. Chase Casgrain expressed the opinion that the precedents adduced by the leader of the opposition had no application to the question. Sir George Foster remarked that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had asked him support to allow the motion to stand for another day. "I wish to the bottom of my heart," declared the minister of trade and commerce, "that he had put his plea that the question might stand over and ever." For many days necessary to amputate another finger

There is more or less work

Every furnace demands some attention. But there is no reason why the twice-a-day job should be anything but pleasant. And to save a little time and a little bother every day means a lot in the course of the winter.

The Sunshine is a furnace any one can look after without spoiling either clothes or temper

The door is large enough for the biggest coal shovel. The grates are strong and turn easily. The ash-pan catches all the ashes without the need of shovelling. The water-pan is located so that it can be filled quickly. Ash-dust cannot escape when the Sunshine is being shaken down. None of that light dust floats about the house or the basement. The damper and the check draft can be regulated from upstairs—and perfectly too. The close-fitting doors and dampers hold the fire for hours without waste.
