

interpreting your motives and desires did I not recognize in the evidence of loyal support of which I am at the moment the proud recipient, a desire on the part of all who are here assembled to express, by their numbers and the warmth of the reception they have accorded me, their confidence in the Government as a whole, in the principles and policies which it advocates, and to which in such considerable measures it has been able to give expression in the legislation of the present Parliament. If, as the head of the Administration, it is my privilege to receive the welcome you have today accorded me, it is because in the Vabinet I have been surrounded by able and the most loyal of colleagues, and in the House of Commons and the Senate have had from the Liberal Members of both Houses as constant and devoted support as was ever accorded the leader of a political party. In their name, not less than in my own, may I gratefully thank you for this memorable testimony of your confidence and good-will.

Honours shared with Leader of Opposition in Province

May I at once express the pleasure it affords me to share the honours of today with the Leader of our Party in this Province, Mr. W. E. Sinclair. There is to me a double pleasure in sharing with him the many experiences of this historical occasion. As the Leader of a party he is perhaps better able than any other person present to enter
