WOMEN, HERE, THERE AND EVERYWHERE

The Problem of Women in China
 "I draw my opinions on this," said Mr. Elmslie, "from a recent number of the Chinese Report." It seems that in China not the least notable point about the whole dramatic and terrific movement is the renaissance and liberation of women in the nation's life. Women are going to take their share with the young Chinese in making a new China. The missionaries never thought of this when they started work. They organized their churches on Western lines. "When the Chinese look into Western churches they get the idea that it is a man's job to run them. If missionaries are not alert a tremendous opportunity may be lost in China. The womanhood of the nation will turn from a system that seems to offer them no call or place," Mr. Elmslie's address threw a searching new light on at least one phase of mission work.

Chinese College Girls
 The most picturesque school in Nan-king is Ginling college, a recently opened institution, operated by five boards presided over by a faculty of eight, and including eighteen girls. As this is only the second year of operation, eighteen is a goodly number. Last year there were hardly enough girls to go around. The college is housed for the present in a charming old "gung wwan" or official residence belonging to the estate of Li Hung Chang, and once occupied by one of his relatives. For Chinese women to come into such an inheritance, even by renting it, is enough to make anyone enthusiastic. Only two years of college work are done at present, but a year's work is being added over autumn, so that it will soon tax the eight teachers to keep the class work up to the high standard that has been decided upon.—Christian Herald.

Miss Ivy Williams
 For the first time in history, a woman is called to the English Bar. Miss Williams is the daughter of an Oxford Solicitor and a lecturer in law at the University.

Miss Hilda Johnstone, M. A. (Manchester), has been appointed as from January 1, 1922, to the University Chair of History tenable at Royal Holloway College. Miss Johnstone was educated at the Universities of Edinburgh and Manchester, and since 1913 has been Reader in History at King's College for Women. From 1916 to 1918 she was on the staff of the War Trade Intelligence Department. She is the author of numerous books and articles on mediæval and modern history.

FRIGHTENED!

"Every morning I woke up, I felt that something terrible was going to happen."

Writes Mrs. M. and she goes on to say, "I wonder if any other woman ever had such fits of depression as I had for over a year. I was so utterly despondent that if it had not been for my children, I believe I would have put an end to my life. Every day and every night was a nightmare. I dreaded going to bed because I lay awake most of the night. When I did sleep, I had the most dreadful dreams. I couldn't eat. I was completely run down—nothing interested me, nothing appealed to me. I consulted several doctors. They prescribed different remedies to build me up but these preparations didn't do me any good. Doctors told me I had a nervous breakdown. I was tired all the time. I felt every day that my strength was gradually leaving me. The least little exertion left me thoroughly tired out. I knew I was gradually wasting away. I felt I was going to die and I was so thoroughly miserable that I did not care whether I lived or not. And then I heard about Carnol and what a fine tonic it was. At first I refused to take it as I was sure it wouldn't do me any good. Finally I did try it with the most wonderful results. I am well and happy every minute of the day now. I eat heartily and sleep soundly. My friends won't believe that Carnol alone has done this for me. I am never despondent now and every day is a day of joy. What Carnol has done for me it will do for you."

Carnol is sold by your druggist and if you can conscientiously say, after you have tried it, that it hasn't done you any good, return the empty bottle and he will refund your money. 2-122

Mr. Justice Roach, of the old Bailey, London, is quoted recently as saying: "The Bench and Bar are gratefully helped in matters of sex by women on the jury. Their knowledge of the female mind is invaluable."

The land which has Lady Rhondda in the Senate, Lady Astor and Mrs. Wintringham in the Commons, has been acquiring women in various useful positions for many years past. Great Britain knows how to lay aside custom and tradition when commonsense and experience require, and having once decided that women are persons, that women's mentality is as good as men's, Great Britain proceeds to use the feminine attributes in a sensible way.

The W. C. T. U. has always held that women only should have charge of others of their own sex, when ill, when insane, when prisoners, etc., etc.

TIDY UP!

In addition to making the farm premises look untidy, there may be real damage lurking in the loose boards lying about the place. Often these boards have nails in them and if turned so the nails stick up, animals or persons may tramp on them injuring their feet. Children are especially endangered. Many cases of lockjaw and blood poisoning have been caused by treading on rusty nails. Better take a little time and pick up such boards, and while you are at it, gather up the other trash. It'll make the place look a lot better and perhaps you can use the material thus collected for fuel in the cook stove. Right now before busy work begins is a splendid time for this task.

GOLF AND ITS MINIMUM ESSENTIALS

Golf has been played for centuries and during this period men have discovered that certain methods of hitting the ball give the best results. When a person adopts these methods he is usually said to play to form.

One of the chief temptations a beginner has to contend with is trying to imitate better players. This is a commendable ambition so long as the imitation is of important points. But more often it is the eccentric feature of the swing that is seized upon and copied. We are more apt to notice the difference in swings than we are the sameness. A good example of this is the opinion most people have of Geo. S. Lyons' swing. Everyone notices his sway, but very few notice his fine wrist action or the even balance of his body.

When the beginner understands the fundamentals of the swing his next task will be to incorporate them into his swing in the most natural way possible. Because some stars in the golf firmament swing one way is not sufficient reason for the learner doing so, for the simple reason that no two human beings are built the same.

One of the most important points in getting most out of the swing is that the club should be travelling at its maximum speed at the moment of impact with the ball. Some experts find that this can be accomplished in one way and others in different ways.

For example at the top of the swings Vardon has a straight right leg, while that of Mitchell is bent. No one can say that one is right and the other wrong, for both methods give excellent results. The most one can say is that for Vardon the straight, right leg is correct, but not so for Mitchell. This detail of the swing is not an essential and in such matters the player must discover for himself which method gives the better results.

It will follow as a consequence that within certain limits each player will be given the greatest latitude to develop his own natural style. All will not be reduced to a common type and it should not be possible to point to any player and say of him merely that he took lessons from so and so. "The highest art is to conceal art." The beginner cannot learn the principles of the game in a day. But with reasonable application (depending of course on himself) it should not require an interminable time to grasp the main points.

In practicing he should always know what he is trying to do. Whenever he is told to do something he should enquire the reason for it. If this rule is followed, progress will follow more quickly than if he practices blindly. This is the only intelligent way of learning the game, unless the player is fortunate enough to have played it from childhood, when nothing further than a good example is required.

SONGS OF SUMMER

By Bliss Carmen
 Soft is the wind over Grand Pre
 Stirring the heads of the grasses,
 Sweet is the breath of the orchards
 White with their apple blow.

There at their infinite business
 Of measuring time forever,
 Murmuring songs of the sea,
 The great tides come and go.

Over the dikes and the uplands
 Wander the great cloud shadows,
 Strange as the passing of sorrow,
 Solemn, impalpable, slow.

For spreading her old enchantment
 Of tender, ineffable wonder,
 Summer is there in the Northland,
 How should my heart not know!

When you see ash trays in the parlor,
 Hubby is boss.

Keep Minard's Liniment in the House.

Don't Take the Office With You

How often you may see among a lively company in a car, with a chattering group on the sands of the sea shore or among the breezy crowd at the tee, where the atmosphere simply shouts of vacation, the face of a man drawn, depressed, perplexed.

That's no aspect for such gatherings!
 It betokens a condition bad for the man himself and one fatal to the enjoyment of the others.

The chances are ten to one that he is brooding over some possible sin of omission or of commission at "the office".

How simple the cure!
 A Long Distance Telephone Call, a few words spoken and a few words heard over the wires and he will be as blithe as his neighbours.

It's uncertainty that is your great joy killer.
 The Telephone enables you to make certain.

How's Business?

Advertising, backed up by the right spirit, the right goods and the right service, can rescue a sinking business and will make a prosperous business more masterful in its own community.

When John Wanamaker, the Prince of Merchants, began business, he resolved to force matters. He was not content to WAIT to be found out—he DETERMINED TO BE found out. In short, he advertised. He threw on his business, small as it was, the light of publicity, and the public of Philadelphia entered the shop on which the light shone.

In this community the public is entering those shops on which the light of advertising is falling.
