HER HUSBAND'S VALET?

"Should a woman be her husband's valet?" That is what a Letter Friend wants to know. She says her husband practically asks that of her.

"He expects me to pick up after him, he expects me to watch and see when his clothes are soiled and put them into the wash. If he needs a clean towel he doesn't think he should take it from the drawer in the bathroom and put his soiled one in the hamper. That is part of my job, he says. He works hard enough at the office and if he earns the money I should be willing to do everything else. What do you think about it? Is it my job to be my husband's valet?" I wish my Letter Friend had given me one important piece of information—go on. Or perhaps several.

How Hard Does He Work?

In the first place, how hard does her husband work at the office? How tired is he when he comes home?

In the second place, how much spare time does she have to herself? I should want to know a great deal more about their life than I do, before I gave the answer that she evidently hopes for—that he is wrong in asking her to be his valet.

It may be that he, like many American business men, is at the point in his career when he is using every ounce of his energy in his struggle to get ahead and that when the day in the office is done, the grasshopper is a burden to him.

She Ought To Be Glad To.

In this case, and if he is giving his wife out of his sweat and toil, service enough so that she has far more leisure than he. I think she should be glad to make his home life as smooth in every way as she can, even doing valet service. Incidentally, it's for her interests as well as

Bulls and Bears.

A Simple Explanation of Terms Used on the Stock Exchange.

By far the greatest number of the public who buy shares are "Bulls." They buy for a rise.

What is a bull? An animal that throws upwards with its horns, while a bear does just the opposite. He pulls down with his paws.

Now, a man with a bit of money to invest—it doesn't matter whether it is ten pounds or a thousand—naturally looks out for a stock likely to rise. It may be something very cheap, so cheap that he thinks it can't go any lower, but must take a turn upwards; or it may be a stock that is jumping—like oils at present, for instance—and which he thinks, or is advised, will go higher still.

So, on the face of it, there are many more "bulls" among investors than "bears."

The "bull" buys not merely to get interest for his money, but in the hope that the stock in which he has invested will rise and become more valuable, so that then he will be able to sell out at a profit.

The "bear" is a much more technical animal.

"Once Bitten Twice Shy."

Let us explain. People who speculate upon the Stock Exchange do not always pay cash for stocks or shares when they buy them. They are allowed to wait until "settling day" when they receive or pay according as to whether the transaction has been a loss or a gain.

We will invent a stock and call it the Mid-Southern Railway. Its £100 shares stand, we will say, at 64. That is, you can buy a hundred pounds' worth of stock for £64 on a particular date.

Jones has heard privately that the traffic returns are improving, and thinks that, as soon as they are made public, the shares are sure to jump. So he goes to his broker and says he will take ten shares.

His credit is known to be good, and the order is accepted. But Jones has been misinformed. When the traffic returns come out, it is found that the company is doing worse than ever. Shares fall six pounds—to 58. The result is that Jones, instead of making the profit which he had anticipated, has on settling day to hand over his cheque for £60, that is, £6 on each of his ten shares.

Jones, you see, was a bull, but got nipped.

Now, at the same time that Jones bought his Mid-Southern, Smith, who was better informed than Jones, had made up his mind that the shares were going to fall. He went about until he found a "bull" like Jones, and said to him: "I should like to sell you a hundred Mid-Southern."

Wise Warning.

The "bull," fully believing they would go up, bought them at 64. Whether Smith actually owned 100 Mid-Southern shares mattered nothing to him, for he knew that Jones' credit was good.

Down went the shares, and on this occasion Smith scooped £600.

So, you see, that, in a case of this sort, the transaction is nothing but a bet. The "bull" bets on the shares rising, the "bear" upon them falling.

The whole thing is a pure gamble, unless—as sometimes happens—the "bull" or "bear" has real information to go on.

But real knowledge is rare. Here is a case in point.

Some years ago a well-known financier had been gambling in certain stocks, and had lost against him. At last he was left with huge debts, which he was unable to meet, and nothing to put against them except 40,000 Vaal River Diamond shares, which he considered absolutely worthless, and half the founder's shares in the same company.

The poor fellow, unable to face the disgrace of being "hammered"—that is, publicly declared unable to meet his obligations—committed suicide.

A few weeks later those Vaal River shares shot up to an enormous price. As for the founder's shares, they realised £6,000 each. If the owner had not been in such a desperate hurry to end things he would have been a millionaire.

The contributor's advice is to buy sound stocks to yield interest, not to meddle with "bulling" or "bearing," both equally dangerous gambles.

After 37 Miles Swim, Toth Has to Quit Again.

Charles Toth, the Boston swimmer who started out on Sept. 23 in another attempt to swim the English channel, abandoned the effort, when five miles from the French coast. He had been in the water 15 hours and 50 minutes, having swum 37 miles, counting his drift with the tide.

Toth was taken from the water in a virtually paralyzed condition, due to the extreme cold. He took only liquid food, and he suffered from seasickness on account of the heavy sea during the night.

The Boston swimmer, starting from Dover, finished in the Bay of Boulogne, southeast of Cape Gris-Nez. He had to battle with a strong wind and with a water temperature under 58 degrees. He said he would not attempt to swim again this year.

EARLY RISING.

My rude forefathers used to say, "If you expect to grow and thrive, at nine o'clock you'll hit the hay, and you'll get up at half past five. In daylight hours you'll strive and strain, and in the night you'll calmly snore; the early bird," they would explain, "rakes in the worm that slugs his loss." Through all the younger years of mine, the course prescribed was fairly run, and I was sound asleep by nine, and up a-coming with the sun. And now that I am growing old, my sorrel whiskers streaked with gray, the ingrown habit keeps its hold, and I am up at break 'o' day. And when the clocks are striking nine, and darkness veils the windweped lee, I say, "That downy couch of mine, up near the roof, looks good to me!"

When I consult the village vet, who doctors me when I am ill, he says, "You're good for long years yet; you do not need the leech's skill. It's wonderful how blithe you skip beneath the burden of your years; while other gray-beards lose their grip, you're husky as a yoke of steers!" The wise old maxims of our dads in modern days don't always thrive; but still some bright precocious lads retire at nine and rise at five.
