

car. The cost of the car is said to be not less than $2,000. The imposing procession marched slowly and with frequent halts down Bonsecour street up to St. Denis street, to St. Catharine, along St. Catharine to St. Lawrence Main street, down St. Lawrence Main to Craig, along Craig to Place D'Armes Hill and up to the Parish Church of Notre Dame.

Here the coffin was raised by pulleys placed in the top of the car, and taken into the Cathedral, which was appropriately draped in mourning. Immense festoons of black and white cloth were hung between its upper galleries, from a central point far above the catafalque, while behind the altar, which was appropriately draped, was an immense white cross depicted on a black ground. From each pillar the Baronet's coat-of-arms was suspended, while wreaths of immortelles were displayed along the gallery fronts. The catafalque bore on the front of its canopy the late Baronet's monogram, while on its right hand side was the inscription "A Disinterested Man," in English and French, and in front were the words "A Sincere Man." Surrounding the catafalque were wreaths, one being dedicated to each Province. Opposite the front of the catafalque was a statue of Jacques Cartier bearing the following motto: "I live again in my descendant." On the opposite side was a marble funeral urn, behind which again was a splendid silk banner, made for the occasion and bearing appropriate devices, all of which were both in French and English.

Mrs. Fabre, brother-in-law of the deceased, officiated at the service. Grand Vicar Careau, of Quebec, was also present at high mass, as well as Bishop Horan of Kingston. The organ was used and supplemented by the full chorals of over 200 trained voices. Aside from this the service was of the usual kind, there being no sermon, preached or funeral oration pronounced.

At the close of the funeral service the procession re-formed and slowly marched down St. James street, the bands playing appropriate airs. It passed around Victoria Square to Beaver Hall, up Beaver Hall to Sherbrooke street, along Sherbrooke street to Guy street, and thence to the cemetery.

During the march of the procession minute guns were fired from a battery stationed on the Champ de Mars, and afterwards on the slope of the mountain. There was no firing over the grave, and the only troops that accompanied the remains to the cemetery were a detachment of the Montreal cavalry, who went merely for the purpose of preserving order.

The French Government and the Press.

Among other curious documents which the Empress of the French left behind her in Paris, when she fled from that city after the battle of Sedan, was a report from the Minister of the Interior to the Emperor, explaining his plan for the organization of the press previous to the elections. By this, of course, was meant the inspiration and control of the press in France, to serve the selfish and ambitious purposes of the late Emperor who obtained his throne by the wanton massacre of thousands, held it by intrigue, and sought to create and galvanize a popularity by poisoning the fountains of intelligence, and making the press of the country serve his own selfish purposes. That he succeeded beyond his deserts in this is fully evidenced by the reports and correspondence found in this batch of secret documents, which were never intended for the public eye; but which, being accidentally discovered, lets in some light on the deplorable policy of the late Emperor. And the success of that policy was for a long time a mystery. The sweeping majorities recorded in favor of the Government were for years unaccountable, until these revelations showed how completely the Government had secured the control—in many direct and indirect ways—of the press, especially in the small towns and country places, and how this powerful agency was incessantly worked to bolster up the Napoleonic dynasty.

It is an ominous enough sign of the ulterior designs of the new McMahon Government that they have been detected in employing the same means in subsidizing and controlling the press, which disgraced the administration of the late Emperor. Only a few days ago they initiated a reactionary policy by removing the Prefects, who had governed wisely and well under President Thiers, and appointed in their place the old bureaucrats of the imperial regime. This was only the first step backward. Soon it was followed by another equally bold and still more pernicious. Secret circulars were sent to all the provincial authorities, suggesting the systematic corruption and subordination of the press—just as Napoleon the Third did through his time-serving ministers. Gambetta, the fearless Republican, soon got wind of this infamous proceeding, and boldly accused the Government, who, naive as he was of it, not only admitted its truth, but defended their conduct. Strange to say, the Assembly, by a large majority, upheld them in their course, endorsed their conduct, and left them free to pursue their nefarious work under the sanction of a tribunal which is supposed to stand by the rights and liberties of the people, and to represent their views.

When the present Administration was formed we had hopes that it would pursue the same wise and cautious policy initiated by M. Thiers; which, while according full liberty to the people, was opposed to all extremes, whether Republican or Autocratic. But it seems that our expectations, and those of every true friend of France, are doomed to disappointment. The Government, in their insane folly, are following the footsteps of Napoleon, and they will fail as surely as he failed in his attempts to stifle free speech and free action. Now on this Assembly hope long to survive after trampling on the necks of the people. Brought together for the purpose of making terms of peace with Germany, its legitimate work ended long ago, and it should then have been dissolved. It may hang together for a little

THE LION! THE LION!

GREAT COMMOTION IN THE DRY GOODS TRADE

and a Tremendous Rush at our Mantle and Millinery Rooms.

On all hands we hear of dull trade: "Nothing doing," says Tom, Dick, and Harry, but it is not so at THE LION. Still great bustle and activity at the leading house. The spring trade is opening beautifully, thus encouraging us to greater endeavors in the public well; and the reason of our success is apparent. Our Goods are all direct from the manufacturer, and none can do a successful business only those who buy from first hands, for which our Establishment has long been noted, and has raised the standard of our Home (combined with the energy of the proprietors of the firm) to the present proud position, and more especially for the last two years, so that our daily sales are almost equal to the combined trade of the same character in the Town of Guelph.

OUR MILLINERY DEPARTMENT

Our Millinery is a complete success this spring, the taste inherent displayed by Miss McDonald is captivating all hearts, and places her high in the ranks of first-class Milliners. Combined with the genuine popularity of Miss Sutherland, thus making our rooms the centre of attraction.

CHANCE & WILLIAMSON.

longer, but it is liable at any moment to be swept out of existence along with the reactionary Government it sustains. The Republicans will not long brook the deep-laid schemes of McMahon, his colleagues and an obsequious Assembly, and if they cannot effect their downfall by legitimate means, they may again kindle the fires of insurrection, that terrible but potent enemy of tyranny, corruption and intrigue.

Speaking of the opposition expressed by citizens of Montreal to the action of the Government in making Sir George E. Cartier's funeral a public one, the Witness says:—"Montreal has by the action of the Mayor been the first to express itself in decided disapprobation of having a public funeral forced upon it. Sir George, as a distinguished citizen, would doubtless have had many marks of respect paid to his memory by citizens of all creeds and nationalities had the Government not interfered in the matter, but left it to the spontaneous action of the public."

Ex-President Thiers, in a letter to a friend, says he has retired into private life believing that party government in France is a mistake, and will only lead into fresh divisions.

It is reported that a treaty of alliance has been concluded between Germany and Italy.
