FARM SOCIOLOGY.

What would you think of the member of church in your community who ran round to all the other churches and kept arping on how hard the seats were and how deep the contribution box was in his own, how the minister preached too long or too short sermons and picked all tha best buttons out of the contribution box before it got to the deacons? What would you think if he refused to give any of his support to this church, but still held his membership there, and claimed to be in sympathy with the brethren while advising them to do as he does, and get their gospel cheaper? Would you not set him down as a hypocrite and a scoundre! After a hypocrite and a scoundre! After a sympathy with the breathen while advising them to do as he does, and get their gospel cheaper? Would you not set him down as a hypocrite and a scoundrel? After a year's practical experience in a farmers' cooperative store, we find that we have a great many such men among out stockholders. Perhaps they do buy some of their supplies elsewhere for less money than they could at the exchange or perhaps they only think they do. It is an easy matter for a merchant to underbid the store on a bill of goods when the purchaser tells him just what the co-operative price is. He can well afford to sell one bill at cost to the miserable shopper who is selling his birthright for a mess of groceries.

It must be expected that in towns where there is no merchants' union (the members of which agree to a code of prices) the prices on various goods will vary somewhat and a shopper can pick out at each store some bargains—perhaps. Again, each store, especially in a good sized town, will almost any day be selling some article at cost or even below cest in order.

tell you, mister man, you've got to come down if you get my trade. I've been over there and we keep good goods. I've seen the bills and I know what's what. Now the bills and I know what's what. Now how much are you going to charge me for 50-cent tea?" Of course the merchant would have a 50-cent tea for 40 or 45 cents, and this long-headed man would have been secured as a customer with low-priced bait "because of your influence, you know," and the Rochdale store would have died from lack of nourishment. But they had more sense than many shareholders of modern exchanges. They had started a business of their own. True, it was small, but they gave it their entire support, and increased it as fast as their limited means would permit. To-day its fame and name are known all over the world, and the saving to the consumers in the English co-operative societies was over $17,000,000 last year.

tive societies was over $17,000,000 tass year.

What is gained by this system of beating down? A farmer comes into town with potatoes, and accepts 32 cents per bushel, taking his pay in eash, with which he buys phosphate. He beats the price down from $28 to $26 per ton. A laborer in the fertilizer works buys the same potatoes for 40 cents after beating them from 45 cents. With the exchange principle worked out, the farmer would have got at least 36 cents for his potatoes and paid $26 for the phosphate without haggling, and the laborer would have paid his 40 cents in eash, and both would have known that they would get their share of the net profit at the end get their share of the net profit at the end of the quarter.—[Joshua Adams, Quondaga county, N. SPIRITUALISM IN LONDON.

Mr. McRobert's Rejoinder to Medium Church.

Doings at the Seances—A Corroboration by Four Citizens.

To the Editor of the ADVERTISER:

To the Editor of the ADVERTISER:

I will once more intrude on your good nature in asking space for a short reply to the Church-Wilson letter of the latinst, on spritualism in London, and intended as a reply to my article in your paper of the 28th ult. The article is signed by W. T. Church and the manuscript re-read and revised by Mr. W. Wilson, so I take it to be a combined effort of these two gentlemen, who have figured so prominently in year. Now, sir. Mr. Church does not attempt

Now, sir, Mr. Church does not attempt to deny that he was the alleged Mr. Burton and that the cheese-cloth and matches went considerably towards the make-up of the lady spirit, but claims he was to a certain extent non compos ments. *Probably, sir, a few of the tactics resorted to by Medium Church in the scance room to deceive an unsuspecting neonal in a dark scance. sir, a lew of the tactics resorted to by Medium Churchinthereance-room to deceive an unsuspecting people in a dark seance will give them a better opportunity of judging as to the truth of this statement, and how far he was deprived of his reasoning powers through his "alleged" entrancement. 1. Was he entranced when he smuggled the cheese cloth into the room? 2. Was he entranced when he took his coat, vest and boots off? 3. Was he entranced when he put on the rubber face, to hide the "poor little decrepid man's rough beard," and his gown of cheese cloth to represent the drapery in which the female spirits dreased themselves, in which to appear before a bashful circle in the dark! Now, sir, we have been present on the "developing chair," when W. T. Church was entranced by Lilly Preston, an "alleged control," and immediately after his entrancement when (he was supposed by his circle to be dead to all that took place) he has taken from his pocket astring, and going into the back realer tell to some circle to be dead to all that took place) he has taken from his pocket astring, and going into the back parfor tied it to some articles on the table; then he would return to his chair and keep jerking the string, endeavoring to leave his circle of the impression that the "spirits" were at work in the back parlor, and when he had rattled the articles long enough he would go back and untie the string and put it in his pocket. Then some alleged "control" would say to the circle "Now please sing a lively piece and I will take the medium out of his trance." Of course the singing would start and at the take the medium out of his trance." Of course the singing would start and at the same moment Mr. Church would begin slapping his breast and head, and when the singing ceased would ask in his innocent way, "How long have we been sitting? Is this, sir, a act of an non compos mentis man? We have been with him at every stage of the game, although in justice to friend Church we admit, in many cases, unknown to him.

On another occasion after the medium On another occasion after the medium was entranced, Dr. Lamont, an "alleged control," was lecturing in the back parlor. I struck a match, and, not to my surprise, found Mr. Church standing in the back room. He immediately made a grand bound for his chair in the front parlor—yes, a jump that would do honor to a professional athlete. Again, sir, we have stood beside this man when he was tied, and when he worked himself free from his bonds he would leave his chair and do the "grand" least. But, sir, I would not believe Church on oath, and consequently will leave the public to judge from the facts as to the truth of his statement in regard to this particular part of the exhibition.

Again, he asks was it in the parlor we discovered him to be a "fraud." We answer yes; and confirmed it after in the "garret," to the satisfaction of others who had not proved it to their own satisfaction in the parlor. And I might say here that when Mr. Church says that I invited scores of people to witness a seance at my house he is making a statement that is utterly false. I invited two people only.

Now, sir, as regards the kissing and caressing spoken of by Mr. Church, I would say that I was deprived of this luxury after I took him by the collar of the coat and gave him a shake or two when he came to play this part of his exhibition with me. One evening he met with a similar fate at the hands of my brother, Mr. Whitehead, and others.

THE PEOPLE'S FORUM.

The Free Library's Future.

To the Editor of the Adventisen:

I had not intended to take up my pen again in this controversy, but several members of the Library Board think that a few words in regard to the letter of Rev. Mr. Speller are necessary. In the first place, Mr. Editor, we have great cause to rejoice that we have so thoroughly converted the ministers of the city in regard to a free library. When the question was last before the citizens the Ministers' Association were not very warm on the subject, and I do say without pride we are gratified at the result of our educational efforts. It is well that the public should know that the Workingmen's Free Library is open to every citizen of either sex; every person old enough to take care of the books is at liberty to use them. Professional men are as welcome To the Editor of the ADVERTISER: Workingmen's Free Library is open to every citizened either servery person old enough to take care of the books is at liberty to use them. Professional men are as welcome as workingmen. It is no societies library. It is free, pure and absolute, to every person who wishes to take advantage of the opportunity it affords, and as the ADVERTISER has so kindly published a list of the books the citizens are in a position to see and judge for themselves in regard to their character. Let me state plainly that the workingmen of London who are represented on the board believe that every man who gives an equivalent for his wages, whether he be a laborer or a professional man, is a worthy member of society. The class of workmen Mr. Speller alludes to are a class who don't think—they are very scarce in workmen's organizations in London.

I must give the ADVERTISER credit for the way in which, through their editorials, they have thrown their influence in the interest of peace and harmony in this controvery. I only regret that a minister of the Gospel should hint at an injunction being served if aid should be granted, and in the same breath want our Free Library to merge into one yet to be brought into life according to his ideas. "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

But, Mr. Editor, the points I want to appear plain are these: When the vote on the Free Library was adverse to that scheme, there was no possible way to have a free library except the plan we adopted. For two years the library has been free to every citizen. Not one cent of salary has been paid in connection with it. The sources from whence it has been maintained are annual concerts, which the people have liberally patronized, grants of money from private citizens, and $100 which was granted by the City Council. Surely if the board has done all this for two years, is it too much to ake the council for aid? I am certain that no fair-minded man will contend otherwise, and I certainly say that the News Library Render Library was all I certainly say that the News Library

I am certain that no fair-minded man will contend otherwise, and I certainly say that the Free Library Board deserve the best wishes and warmest sympathies of the citizens in their efforts to supply free literature to the people. The great object in view has always been that in time the people would be educated to see the great benefits that would result from a free library properly conducted. We are of the same opinion as the Ministerial Association in regard to the necessity of a city library owned and controlled by the citizens; only the difference with us has been we took off our coats and went to work, and instead of theorizing, we actually demonstrated by practicable experience how the work should be begun. The demands of the workingmen on the city treasury have been very light, and I believe it is only fair and just they should receive support now. We are asking the City Council to put representatives on this library board, and we think it would be advisable for all who are in favor of a free library to send in hear dear the control of the control of the control of the control of a free library to send in their donations to the control of a free library to send in their donations to the control of the control of a free library to send in their donations to the control of the control of a free library to send in their donations to the control of the control of a free library to send in their donations to the control of the control of a free library to send in their donations to the control of the control representatives on this illustry board, and are in favor of a free library to send in their donations to the one that is already established. The people are using it now. Why divide forces and withold what would be a benefit at the present? It must take some time before this question can be decided in any otherway, and as there is not, and never has been, any other free library in this city, let us recognize the fact, especially as I am certain if we ever have a larger library this will be the nucleus of it. The working class who by their energy and self-sacrifice have reared this monument of their enterprise have done their best and will apologize neither for the existence of the library nor the literature it supplies. I remain, Mr. Editor, yours, etc.
