THE TORONTO WORLD.

FRIDAY MORNING, AUG. 29, 1884.

From the London World

The Capri women are almost invariably handsome and healthy looking. In the course of half an hour's walk you will distinguish in the women and girls you meet Saracen, Spanish and Greek types, surisland. But what strikes one mostly is were sitting in London to hear motions as that statuesque gracefulness of these girls a divisional court, when two lady suitors in all their movements. However mean simultaneously rose to address their lordbuilding stone or climbing a ladder building stone or climbing a ladder with a pail of mortar on her head, the Capriots girl will always be graceful, and the lines of her body in motion will always call up reminiscences of Greek art. This fact, together with the scenery of the island, the delicious climate, and the cheapness of living has made Capri a favorite resort of artists of all nations. Several artists have wived with sevene of the country—their former models Capri a favorite resort of artists of all nations. Several artists have wived with women of the country—their former models—and-settled down to a strange half-wild and half-civilized existence. Other residents who, for various reasons, have settled in Capri have likewise taken unto themselves handmaidens and spouses from among the women of the country; and as these residents belong to all nationalities, with perhaps a majority of Anglo-Saxons, you may imagine what a curious, heterogeneous and thoroughly a curious, heterogeneous and thoroughly is. A man who has had the force of character to cut himself off from the life of cities and to come and live, year in and year out, in beautiful, calm and sleepy Capri, is a widely different creature from the ordinary mortal, for whom it is supreme bliss to take an excursion train to Henne bay, where he sits upon the beach, hinds a green bandana round his head and reads the Morning Post. All the foreign residents in Capri are characters who would repay study, and their ideas and manner of living would not prove an ungrateful subject for the novelist.

Tragic Mystery in Leipsic

Some novelist or playwright will, no doubt, make good use of a very mysterious story which is now exciting the readers of the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung. On a certain evening recently a man named B. was sitting at supper with his wife at his me in the Nurnberger strasse, Leipsic, when he heard a ring at the outer door when he heard a ring at the outer door and the servent being absent, went to see who was there. When he returned he had apparently lost his appetite, but he declined to give any explanation as to who had summoned him. In a short time the bell rang again. Mrs. B. went to the door, where she found an unknown man who desired to speak to the master of the house. B, upon being informed of this, went out once more; but, as he went out once more; but, as he did not come back, his wife became uneasy and began to search for him. She discovered no trace of her husband either discovered no trace of her musuality in the hall or in the street; but in a small in the hall or of which was locked from room, the door of which was locked from the inside and had to be forced open, she found him suspended by the neck from a gas bracket by means of a silk handker-chief. She rushed to the street door to ery for assistance, and was there confrontery for assistance, and was there confronted by the unknown man. He at once entered and cut down the body of Mr. B., who was, however, quite dead. When the police arrived the unknown man had disappeared, and all efforts to find him have since been unavailing. He is said to be of appeared, and all enorts to had all have since been unavailing. He is said to be of about 30 years of age, of tall and prepossessing appearance, and of gentlemanly address. The deceased was in his 59th year, and as he was in comfortable circum ces and on good terms with his wife, the motive which is pelled him to take his own life remains a mystery.

A Man Who Betrayed Andrew Johnson.

Buck Lewis died last night after a brief illness. Lewis was at one time the body servant of Andrew Johnson when that distinguished Tennesseean was president of the United States, and created quite a sensation in Washington about that time by revealing some of the great commoner's private affairs to the president's enemies. This was done while the great impeachment trial was going on, and when it was told became the ruling sensation of the wood of Joppa (in the "Castle of Otranto.") Kites and adjutants, larger than the Calcutta ones, were feeding on the bodies, and dogs were feasting in some places, and in others howling all over the plain, I saw a black dog tearing in a furious way great pieces of flesh from a dead man, looking fiercely and not regarding me. I thought the group horrible and sublime. At last I began to feel a good deal of horror—awful. but not unpleasant—when, by way of at but not unpleasant—when, by way of arding to the sublimity, the evening fired, and to my surprise I base whistle over my head.

"From a till 1 o'clock

denly to cease, and the sky became densethe overcash. At hair-past 12 the darkness was as great as at midnight. The streets became immediately deserted, scarcely a human being moving about. Much censternation was caused by the extraordinary phenomenon. No attempt was made to light the gas even in the public offices. At 12.40, when the darkness was greatest, the thunder began to peal and the lightning to flash, and for the next half hour a storm prevailed such as has seldom been experienced in this country. Rain fell in a continuous sheet, flooding the streets and causing great damage. The darkness ausing great damage. leared gradually away."

A few days ago Baron Huddlestone—the last of the barons—and Justice Hawkins simultaneously rose to address their lordships. Huddlestone, who is, or at all events used to be, an accomplished society man, at once, with great suavity, said: "This is a question of precedence. Which of you two ladies claims to be senior?" The race for priority immediately became a donkey race. Neither of the fair litingants would confess to be older than the other, and each was anxious that her rival should speak first. Fortunately, Mr. Justice Hawkins came to the rescue, and called on the one who happened to be nearer the centre of the court; and so the dread question remain unanswered.

(From the Albany Times). "Promise me, dear husband," said young Mrs. Newbridge, affectionately, to Charles—"promise me never, in your darkest hours, ever to commit suicide. I am told it will vitiate your life insurance."

Ignorant Notions About the sun and Moon From the Popular Science Monthly. By the Hurons the moon is called the creator of the earth and grandmother of the sun; in the myths of the Ottawas it is an old woman with a pleasant white face the sister of the day star. The Chiquitos call the moon their mother, and the Navajos make it a rider on a mule. Where the planets are worshipped, preference in honors is generally accorded to the brighter and more conspicuous star of day. But the Botucudos of Brazil give the higher lace to the moon and derive most of the henomena of nature from it, and in Cenral America and Hayti are also people who old the moon in no less honor. Curiously, hese people find their counterpart mong tribes of Western, Southern and mong tribes of westerning with dance entral Africa, who rejoice with dance central Airica, who rejoice with dancing and feasts at each appearance of the new moon, and expect an improvement of their condition from its beneficent induced; and they are not so far removed their condition from its beneate in fluence; and they are not so far removed from the superstitious women of civilized Europe and America who wait for the increase of the moon to change their dwelling, to cut their hair, to be married, and to baptize their children. A belief existed among the ancient Mexicans and Peruvians, the Natchez of the Mississippi, and the Appalachians of Florida, that the sun was the radiant abode of dead chiefs and braves. To the Esquimanx of Labrador belongs the honor of having discovered that the moon was the paradise for the good, while the wicked were censigned to a hole in the earth; although some of the South American Indians and the Polynesians of Tokelau may be nearly abreast of them in the competition.

An English and a French Novellst.

From the Atlantic for September.

Between the method of a Daudet and a Trollope, which to choose? What is the outcome respectively of their labors? Repelled by the English novelist's lack of all grade of form, by the slovenliness and wearisome verbosity of his style and his uniform presaic coloring, we may be tempted to deny him his due, to refuse him the recognition of his fidelity to the truth of the average human nature which he paints. The reverse is apt to be the case with the reader of Daudet, or other of the skiltul French writers of to day. Their charm is the reader of Daudet, or other of the skiltul French writers of to day.
