

A National Achievement

Q To complete twenty-five years of continuous publication of The Canadian Magazine is a feat that Canadians may well be proud of, for, after all it has been the support of the readers which has enabled the publishers to achieve this attainment.

The "Canadian" is the oldest monthly magazine published in Canada and the only one that has ever even nearly approached the quarter century mark.

It has now become a publication which all broad minded, deep thinking Canadians, who have the welfare of Canada at heart, should read.

In it all questions of national importance are discussed by the ablest men in the Country.

Art is represented by reproductions of the works of our best Canadian artists and also European artists of note.

Fiction is also well represented by the the best short stories obtainable in this country.

Our advertising pages cannot be overlooked as they are filled with announcements to the reader of the largest manufacturers on the American continent. Advertisements to which the slightest objection could be made, are not accepted.

To have The Canadian Magazine in your library adds an atmosphere of distinction to it.

Because you have not been a subscriber for the last twenty-five years is no reason why you should not be a subscriber for the next twenty-five years.

"The Canadian Magazine" has become a publication of which Canadians may well be proud. It has been improving steadily until it is both handsome as to appearance and highly creditable in content.—The Detroit Free Press

The subscription rate is $2.50 to any place in the British Empire, $3.00 to the United States and $3.25 to Foreign Countries.
