1759.

s raifed ontempt er how of exmultion the ve that clate of ime or nds to vicifivicifiim and

ho rend the
mar-

d meet every comn, beappen

It

It is well enough known to be according to the usual process of Nature, that men should sicken and recover, that some designs should succeed and others miscarry, that friends should be separated and meet again, that some should be made angry by endeavours to please them, and some be pleased when no care has been used to gain their approbation; that men and women should at first come together by chance, like each other so well as to commence acquaintance, improve acquaintance into sondness, increase or extinguish sondness by marriage, and have children of different degrees of intellects and virtue, some of whom die before their parents, and others survive them.

Yet let any man tell his own ftory, and nothing of all this has ever befallen him according to the common order of things; fomething has always discriminated his case; some unusual concurrence of events has appeared, which made him more happy or more miserable than other mortals; for in pleasures or calamities, however common; every one has comforts and afflictions of his own.

It is certain that, without some artificial augmentations, many of the pleasures of life, and almost all its embellishments, would fall to the ground. If no man was to express more delight than he felt, those who felt most would raise little envy. If travellers were to describe the