Adams FEBRUARY FURNITURE SALE

Chalking Up New Records

It requires a lot of assurance to claim that the furniture we are offering in this February Sale is as good, or better, than any we have sold you before at equal prices.

We have done such wonderful things in a price-cutting way that to surpass, or even equal, our past doings is a feat few stores would hope to accomplish, but realizing that each sale has to make its own record, our buyers baited their hooks with liberal orders, threw them into the most prolific streams, and landed a number of the biggest fish in the furniture sea.

Carloads of the choicest furniture arriving daily to replace the immense quantities we are sending out to homes all over the Dominion at prices like these:-

THE ADAMS FURNITURE COMPANY, LIMITED - - CITY HALL SQUARE

On Parliament Hill

Friday was again farmer's day in Ottawa. The fruit growers stormed the house of commons in numbers never less-large than those of the grain growers. But the grain growers had taken time by the forelock, at least that is what Sir Wilfrid's remarks conveyed. 'You have come too late; I would have been glad if you had been here along with the other delegates.' But the fruit growers had no occasion to come until Mr. Fielding announced the result of his conference at Washington. 'We were doing all right before; we were satisfied,' said E. D. Smith, Winona. 'The protection we have received,' he said, 'imposed no hardship on anybody—a few cents on half a dozen baskets of peaches, pears or plums.' 'The protection we have received,' they share to opening up the western country, we have borne our part in building the great transcontinental railway systems. What we ask is just what you have given us, simply fair treatment.' The fruit growers put up a straightforward argument. They made no criticism against any other industry. They made a good case when they told the government that their friends in the west had ample time to approach the government when they had a grievance and knew negotiations were to take place. But who on earth knew that this bolt would fall from the blue sky? The day one put it. We had no occasion to memorialize the government on the subject before this; we had no grievance. A fair way of talking. W. O. Sealey (Wentworth) had his day too. It was a pleasant experience for a member to introduce a deputation opposed to a measure for which he would vote. It was the irony of fate. Let it be said that Mr. Sealey's face did not wear a triumphant expression. In the afternoon Mr. Sealey did some campaigning. For a time it sounded like Frank Broadstreet Carvell bringing up the heavy artillery in the public accounts committee, to defend a pet departmental official. In a passage way leading to the library is a plaster tablet erected to commemorate the taking possession of the Arctic archipelago by Capt. Bernier. As Mr. Sealey was dwelling on the enterprise of Canada in having the first ship across the Atlantic under Canadian flag and a Canadian port, he swayed with national pride, and turned to view the Bernier memorial. 'Visions of the tory press, the public accounts committee, the champagne cigars and silver service of that famous joy cruiser, the member for Wentworth halted, sputtered and, finally, with a 'Turn the crank Denny and let the show go on,' he became full of joy over the wide expanse of Canadian territorial possessions. With hand uplifted, eyes aflame and bosom swelling, he addressed Bernier and his crew. He employed adjectives, one two, three, and sometimes four with his nouns; for the enrichment of Canada and the glory of the flag and other ideals were suggested, and, finally, a fitting suggestion 'that some things were said about the "Arctic" that they could forget about. 'Leading his constituents into the general precincts, Mr. Sealey was careful to point out that the carpet was red in color. He thought these men from the orchards and vineyards knew only one color, green. 'This is red, that is why we call it the red chamber.' A fine piece of deduction. He might have said something about the sleeping sickness, but one cannot remember all. At any rate, pointing to the hall of fame, he said, 'These are portraits of former speakers of the senate. A man must be dead before he qualifies for a place here.' It was a clever ruse, that amendment of Mr. F. D. Monk on the motion to go into committee on the respective resolutions. He asked for delay. These proposals have been thrust on the country suddenly. The members should have time to meet their constituents. Did the government know about it? 'Not a word was the reply of an insurgent.' Anyway the whip had to get busy. 'It is a pity,' said one, 'that we did not place a division bell at the ice race track.' Mr. Monk lost no time of catching the Speaker's eye. No sooner had that gentleman started to repeat, 'Mr. Fielding moves, seconded by...' 'Mr. Speaker,' came a voice from behind the Conservative leader, 'before you leave the chair, I desire on behalf of a large number of interested persons...' and the game was on. Of course, the motion was rejected, but what a chance for the six months' boast. 'We made them rouge,' said a red-faced fellow from the back benches, as he rubbed his hands together. Samuel Barker (Hamilton) voted with his party in favor of the Monk amendment, but the stampede caught his wind, and when the Speaker called out, 'Seconded by Mr. Barker.' 'No, no,' came from the Hamilton member, and finally W. E. Nason (Crestview) relieved the situation. Col. Sam Hughes (Victoria and Hamilton) has been after the scalps of clericalism, editors (some) and peace propagandists all and sundry. 'Closer union between Britain and the colonies,' is the colonel's slogan, and he has a move for trouble when that is opposed. In the house of commons Col. Hughes puts into practice the tactics used in South Africa. He arranges his facts as he places his men on a reconnoitre—all over the lot, and then starts a running fire. There are pot shots all down the line, and the unlucky individual who happens to be for the time the target of the colonel's sharpshooting has a good chance of getting hit. The colonel is not sparing in the use of adjectives. 'The other day when H. H. Miller (St. Grey) wanted to read the resolution passed by the Ottawa Ministerial Association, condemnatory of the members for Victoria, Mr. Speaker interposed on a point of order: "Let him read it," said the colonel. "Order, order," came from the back benches on both sides, and somebody pulled Colonel Sam's coat tail. "No, by ginger, I won't," he thundered, in answer to a call to sit down. "I want to wipe the floor with those fellows." And he did. "The resolution speaks of the pain it gives them, I'll give them balm for that pain before I'm thru with them." Col. Hughes doesn't love the min-
