Origin of Woollen Manufactures in England.—
King Edward III., on entering Flauders, in the middle of the 14th century, preparatory to his invasion of France, was much astonished at the prosperous condition of thore Provinces, and applied himself to learn the causes, which he discovered to be the woollen manufactures of that country. He accordingly endeavoured to excite a similar spirit of manufacturing industry among his own subjects; but they were for a long time insensible to the advantages of their situation, and neglected his wise admonitions; and for a number of years neglected to manufacture those goods, the materials of which they furnished to the enterprising inhabitants of Flanders.

King Edward, however, spared no exertions to establish manufactures in his dominions. He induced Flemish artizons to settle in England, and caused many laws to be enacted for the encouragement of manufactures, particularly Statute 11, Ed. 3. Chap. 2., by which all persons were prohibited from wearing any woollen cloth, except it were of England and first turn of the active and enterprising genus of his people to those arts which have elevated England to the highest rank among the manufactures and commercial unations.—Boston Mercantile Journal.

A Countier of the Sixteenth Century.

—Queen Elizabeth, when in her sixtieth year, is thus described by that finished courtier, Sir Walter Raleigh. He pictures her, riding like Alexander, hunting like Diana, walking like Venus, the gentle wind blowing her hair about her pure cheeks like a nymph—sometimes sitting in the shade like a goddess, sometimes singing like an angel, sometimes playing like Orpheus.

Two Tombs—A Contrast.—Potemkin—the illustrious—the powerful—who not only governed all Russin, but even made the haughty Catherine his suppliant, obtained a grave at Cherson, where the benevolent Howard terminated his glorious career. Mysterious Providence, by events always remote from human foresight, had wonderfully destined that these two men, celebrated in their lives by the most contrary deeds, should be interred nearly upon the same spot. It is not within the reach of possibility to bring together, side by side, two individuals more remarkably characterised by every opposite qualification, as, if the hand of destiny had directed two persons in whom were exemplified the extremes of virtue and vice, to one common spot, in order that the contrast might remain a lesson for mankind.—Potemkin, bloated and pampered by every vice, after a path through life, stained with blood and crimes, at last the victim of his own selfish excess.—Howard, a voluntary exile, enduring the severest privations for his fellow creatures, and laboring to his very latest breath in the exercise of every social virtue.
