

THE RETURN OF THE QUEST

CANADA SEEKS BOYS AND GIRLS FROM OLD LAND

Ottawa Official Enthusiastic
After Campaigning in England—Demand Exceeds Supply.

(By C. Prescott McLennan)
(Toronto Globe)
Liverpool, Eng., Sept. 16.—A real live campaign on behalf of a larger influx of English boys and girls for adoption in Canadian homes, has been inaugurated in England as a result of the visit of Mr. G. Bogue Smart, Supervisor of Juvenile Immigration, Ottawa. Mr. Smart recently spent two months in this country.

When your correspondent saw Mr. Smart on board the "Regina" as he was about to sail for Canada, he was full of his pet hobby—the migration of English children to Canada. "I have now been a quarter of a century at this work, and the longer I am at it the more I am convinced that it is one of the best things Canada is doing," said Mr. Smart. "Immigration, of course is one of our outstanding questions. In Canada we are short of people in all the provinces, and unless we get them coming in fairly large numbers our progress will be comparatively slow. And the right kind of migrant is really more important than mere numbers. My work has been going up and down Great Britain for two months."

"How many children per annum can Canada find good homes for?" I inquired.

"More, I fear, than we are likely to get," said Mr. Smart. "For the fiscal year ending March 31 we had applications at our departments for 15,000. These requests came from every province in the Dominion, Ontario and the western provinces being the largest applicants."

"But, although 15,000 English boys and girls could be found comfortable homes in Canada, we had, as a matter of fact, only 1,500 available. That tells the whole story very briefly, and carries with it a lesson which I hope the English people will take to heart. While your English cities and towns have more children than they know what to do with, we in Canada have to go short. That is a condition of affairs which requires the closest attention."

"How do you propose to remedy it?"

"Well, there being no dearth of children in England, it is up to the English themselves to find the remedy, for it is as much to their interests as to ours to have this problem solved. The various English institutions that have the rearing of children could enlarge their operations, but as that is impossible without funds it seems to be for the philanthropists to furnish the 'sineus of war'."

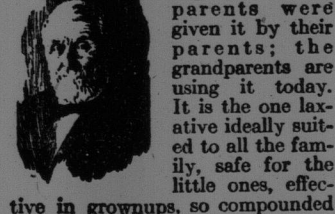

The figures and results of child migration from England to Canada, as given by Mr. Smart, are highly interesting. The work has now been going on for some forty-odd years. From Great Britain there have gone a total of more than 70,000 boys and girls for "adoption" during that time. Most of these have been sent out by the institutions that specialize in this branch of philanthropy, although a few now and then are sent by direct individual effort.

The Dr. Barnardo Homes have done most in this respect. While all their children are not destined for the dominions, a very large number is sent out, the total going to Canada being 25,000.

Miss Birt's name is also well known in Canada. Only a few weeks ago she took a number of boys to Canada, Canadians who visit Liverpool should

Third Generation is Using Syrup Pepsin

No other Laxative can replace Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Syrup Pepsin in the confidence of those who use it.

THERE are thousands of healthy, robust young men and women who have never in all their lives taken any other laxative for constipation than Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Syrup Pepsin.

Their parents were given it by their parents; the grandmothers are using it today. It is the one laxative ideally suited to all the family, safe for the little ones, effective in grownups, so compounded that elderly people, who are constantly forced to take a laxative because the intestinal muscles are weakening, find increased dosage unnecessary. This wonderful constipation remedy has been used continuously for 30 years, and over 10 million bottles and over 100 million boxes of this natural vegetable laxative in the world. The cost averages but a cent a dose. Every druggist sells it, and under a guarantee to do as claimed or your money will be refunded.

Millions of carefully selected homes are never without a bottle of inspect her home for orphans, on Myrtle street, and see the great work going down there. Miss Birt was, in very truth, the pioneer of this movement, having taken it up some forty years ago, in conjunction with Miss MacPherson, who also still carries on her work in London.

Has Added 9,000 to Population.

All told, Miss Birt has added 9,000 children to Canada's population, a very large family indeed, and many of them are prominent today in various walks of life. Why this extremely capable and kind-hearted lady has not yet been signally honored by the British government is one of those things one can easily understand. If she would accept the D. B. E. (Dame of the British Empire) few women in England would be more entitled to the honor.

The Quarrier homes in Glasgow are of later origin. They are splendid institutions—perhaps the best in Great Britain of their kind. I believe they have already sent Canada some 4,000 "children," and will do much more, being well organized and under careful and competent management.

These three great enterprises for the rearing, education and ultimate migration to homes overseas of English orphans are a credit to Great Britain. They have done great things in the past, are still doing them, and will do much greater things in the future.

More Publicity Required.

Mr. Smart's visit has accomplished one really useful purpose—it has aroused keener public interest throughout Great Britain than has ever been taken before in this subject. The English public is not easy to arouse,

ANY FAMILY MAY TRY IT FREE

Thousands of parents are asking themselves, "Where can I find a trustworthy laxative that anyone in the family can use when constipated?" I urge you to try my Laxative Syrup Pepsin. It will surely provide a liberal free sample bottle, sufficient for an adequate test. Write where you want a sample bottle. Dr. W. R. Caldwell, 23 Colwell Building, Toronto, Ont. Do it now!

Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Syrup Pepsin. Mr. Henry Ricker, Chippewa, Ont., says it is the best medicine they have ever used, and Mrs. M. Martin of Massey, Ont., uses it herself and recommends it to her friends. There is scarcely a day that does not need it for constipation, flatulency, auto-intoxication, biliousness, intestinal poisoning, headaches, colic and indigestion, and to break up fevers and colds.

Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Syrup Pepsin is a scientifically-balanced emulsion of Egyptian senna with pepsin and pleasant-tasting aromatics. The formula is on the package. As the popularity of this natural vegetable laxative increases, the public discards the harsher physics like calomel, castor oil, candy form, salt waters and powders. Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Syrup Pepsin cleanses the bowels more cleanly and without any danger.

Although his career was cut short, he had enjoyed considerable notoriety, and it was not strange that, like his predecessor, the dinner burglar, he should be followed by a veritable epidemic of gentleman burglars. None of his successors, however, equaled him in good looks or elegance. There were plenty of them, but somehow none of them ever achieved his distinction. Many of them had no just claim to the title of "gentlemen," and it was a mystery how some of them ever came by it.

"If this fellow is a gentleman burglar," cried a detective on locking up such a thief who had aspired to the title, "then God save the name gentleman. Look at this fellow! He's wearing a dinner coat, a fancy flowered vest and a pair of Scotch plaid trousers. He carries a cane and twirls his waxed mustache. When I searched him he was as clean as a whistle. His clothes were made a good many years ago, and he picked up most of them in different flats he robbed. He says he's hungry, and I believe him."

These were followed by other real types such as the phantom burglar, so called because he flitted here and there like a ghost, and eluded many police traps, and the luncheon burglar, who instead of appearing at the dinner hour, appeared at the hour for the midday meal; the humorist burglar, who used to stuff the clothing of his victims in out-of-the-way places behind radiators, on fire-escapes and in vases, and the soft-hearted burglar who, after listening to a sad tale from his victim, returned the fruits of his theft and departed weeping.

These have all appeared and had their day. Although the old type burglar is not altogether extinct, he is very much on the rocks at present. His successor is for the most part a craven fellow who prefers to rob a flat or a house when it is vacant, rather than to take himself that no one is at home before he ventures to jimmie his way inside. He had no regular hours of work, but as a rule he preferred to do his thieving in the daytime rather than at night. At the first sign of danger he runs for cover.

Although he is a coward at heart, he is dangerous like a rat when cornered, and will fight back. If he believes his life is at stake or he is in danger of arrest, he sometimes will not hesitate to shoot to kill.

Modern Burglar's Strange Evolution—Change Harks Back to Days of the First Operator.

(New York Times)

Methods of criminals, like those of other craftsmen, change with the times. If the criminal of twenty-five years ago returned today to his former occupation, he would be quick to realize that he was working under new and strange conditions. The old-time burglar would find much to stupor and startle him. He would discover that houses were built on a different plan than that there were of all kinds to anticipate his visits.

Like the business or professional man, the modern man, if he expects to elude capture, must keep abreast of the times. He has had painful experiences with burglar alarms and other burglar-catching devices. These experiences have made him canny, and when he starts to work with his tools in his pocket, he makes a fervent prayer that the "cops" will not get him. Ordinarily, he has no desire to emulate those bold, bad burglars of the past, who used to break into a flat while its occupants were peacefully asleep, make off successfully with the family jewels and heirlooms, and then join their comrades in a friendly saloon where, over their glasses, they would discuss the big adventure.

It was not to be the accepted thing for these burglars of the older and bolder type to work exclusively at night. In those days a burglar who would get on the job before the midnight hour was either a novice at the game, or a fellow who was rapidly losing his sanity. No self-respecting cracksmen would so far forget himself as to tackle a job before the prescribed, ordained witching hour. If he were a regular burglar, it was equally important that he should hide himself home to bed long before the first pale flush of dawn should streak the horizon.

Just when the burglars began to change all of this is not definitely known. Unfortunately, police historians have neglected to chronicle the time when these well-intentioned housebreakers threw form and etiquette and the clock to the four winds, and instead, a cherished tradition, went to work when and where they pleased. Took Cue From Dinner Burglar.

The change, nevertheless, radical and revolutionary, took place. It began with the published chronicles and adventures of certain "dinner burglars," so-called because they "burglarized" while their unsuspecting victims were gathered about the dinner table at the evening meal. The first accounts of this new and heretofore unknown type of burglar caused everywhere a profound sensation. Everybody was hoping and praying that the police would apprehend the bold fellow, and everybody, including the police, were speculating on what manner of criminal he could be. The regular members, however, of the housebreaking fraternity paid scant attention to the excitement of the new type had provoked, but quietly pursued their old method of robbing places in the wee, small hours.

It was not strange that dinner burglars should spring up in all sections of the country. The old cracksmen refused to become interested; they merely sneered, shrugged their shoulders and predicted that the craze would shortly die out. At first dinner burlars had sprung up slowly by dozens, later they appeared by the hundreds, and became eventually so common that they ceased to cause the faintest ripple when criminal affairs were being discussed.

They were succeeded by a "gentleman" burglar who caused as profound a sensation as the first dinner burglar. Victims who had caught a glimpse of him described his tall, handsome, athletic and exquisitely groomed. He appeared at times in different dress. He had been seen in evening clothes, silk hat and opera cloak, a cane in one hand and a pair of white gloves in the other. He was as bold as he was well dressed and handsome. Retiring and bashful ladies had encountered him in their boudoirs unexpectedly. At such times he would grab a handful of rings and trinkets from a dresser and with panther-like agility disappear through window or door.

He had been seen sealing the sides of a building like a monkey or jumping like a squirrel from one roof to another. He was always too quick for his pursuers. On more than one occasion when the police believed they had him trapped he managed to elude them. They finally caught him after a long pursuit. He turned out to be the black sheep of an old family. When they searched his abode they found that his wardrobe had not been exaggerated. He had half a dozen trunks filled with the most approved creations of the tailor's art.

None Equaled the Original.

Although his career was cut short, he had enjoyed considerable notoriety, and it was not strange that, like his predecessor, the dinner burglar, he should be followed by a veritable epidemic of gentleman burglars. None of his successors, however, equaled him in good looks or elegance. There were plenty of them, but somehow none of them ever achieved his distinction. Many of them had no just claim to the title of "gentlemen," and it was a mystery how some of them ever came by it.

"If this fellow is a gentleman burglar," cried a detective on locking up such a thief who had aspired to the title, "then God save the name gentleman. Look at this fellow! He's wearing a dinner coat, a fancy flowered vest and a pair of Scotch plaid trousers. He carries a cane and twirls his waxed mustache. When I searched him he was as clean as a whistle. His clothes were made a good many years ago, and he picked up most of them in different flats he robbed. He says he's hungry, and I believe him."

How thousands are regaining the splendid vigor of health

When a man "slows up"—begins to feel his strength and vigor slipping away—gets run down, nervous, irritable—

One of two things is wrong.

His body is either failing to nourish properly the living cells which compose it, or it is failing to throw off the poisonous waste that gathers in the system.

Check either of these processes, even temporarily, and health is threatened. And yet the bodies of millions are either half-starved or clogged up!

The fresh, living cells of Fleischmann's Yeast contain a natural food—with the very elements which help the body perform these two vital functions.

Like any other plant or vegetable, yeast produces the best results when fresh and "green"—not dried or "killed." Fleischmann's Yeast is the highest grade living yeast—always fresh. It is not a medicine, it is a natural food. Results cannot be expected unless it is eaten regularly.

Everywhere physicians and hospitals are prescribing Fleischmann's Yeast to correct constipation, skin disorders and to restore appetite and digestion.

"Assured perfect regularity and added 25 lbs. of weight"

A recent letter tells of an unusually bad case of a common ailment—a New Yorker who suffered from chronic constipation. Since he was eleven years old, he had used "everything that could be suggested"—without a cure. Three operations had been necessary. And then three cakes of Fleischmann's Yeast a day for a period of one month not only assured perfect regularity, but by adding 25 lbs. restored him to his normal weight.

Eat two or three cakes a day regularly—plain, or spread on crackers, or mixed with water or milk. If you prefer, get six cakes at a time. They will keep in a cool, dry place for two or three days. Begin at once to know what real health means! Be sure you get Fleischmann's Yeast. All grocers have it.

CONTRIBUTION TO V. O. NURSES

The Duke of Rothesay Chapter of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire met yesterday afternoon at the residence of Mrs. W. R. Hibbard, with the regent, Mrs. W. S. Allison, presiding. The reading of the reports of the municipal and provincial chapters of Rothesay Chapter, and in adopting their meetings occupied much time, and considerable interest was taken in the various items. The chapter voted to give $25 to the Victorian Order of Nurses as a contribution towards the tag day proceeds and it also voted to send its share of the municipal chapter expenses to the treasurer. Arrangements were made for sending the book each month to Dr. Grenfell's mission in Labrador. The chapter also decided to "adopt" a country school. The Rothesay Consolidated school has always had a good friend in the Duke of Rothesay Chapter, and in adopting a rural school it was not intended to curtail the work done for the Consolidated school in any way. The meeting was informed of some charitable work that might be undertaken and it was decided to lend assistance. Further plans were made for the sale which is to be held in December and which is the largest undertaking to raise funds which the chapter plans for. The meeting was a very interesting one.
