But not only on thes occasions, but through my whole life, as an oc casional witnesser of theatrical representations I can state with the most sole nn assusance that I have rarely met with even immoral in sinuations in popular plays, much less with essentially immoral plots. On the contrary, I have generally found the floor of the stage oc cupied either by innocent and amusing pictures of popular manners, such as fill the pages of Thackeray and that great philosopher M: Punch (the true British Aristophanes), or pathetic stories of human suffering, generally springing out of human folly or sin, the con templation of which could scarcely fail to have

"That's my umbrella and I can prove it.

It has a 'J cut on the handle." So it had, and after some parleying it was handed over. The new owner was smiling very blandly, as the crowd ap-plauded, when a man turned in off the avenue to escape a wetting. As soon as
