THE BOODLE BRIGADE.

A regiment is to be organized at Ottawa bearing the above appellation, as it is believed that that city will furnish material enough for all the recruits wanted. It is under advisement among the leaders whether or not to recall General Middleton from England and place at his disposal the Colony, and in the meantime, until that gentleman is heard from, to place the command in the hands of Colonel Caron. Should General Middleton accept, he will make the uniform regulations, and no doubt the winter dress will be fur shakers and gaiters, and leggings of the same material, to be obtained (according to the word of command) at any of the fur stores in Canada, no matter what the cost, or no coat at all. Then it is expected that recruits from Quebec will volunteer—in such case Capt. Mercier will be fully recognized as a brother in arms, and will render most valuable assistance and have his company under good drill and discipline. As Sir Hector Langevin has already retired with all the honors, it is not at all likely that he will be taken into the service. That gentleman has been fighting enough already in his day, and is scared considerably. But it is not at all unlikely that he may at some future time be called upon to head a company's guard, in case the Boodle Brigade Regiment does not understand its duties in maneuvering, although there is some doubt about this, as all the likely members have undergone considerable drilling. Premier Abbott, it is supposed, will be made Quarter-Master General, while the Minister of Justice is to be chaplain. His sacerdotal bearing is much in his favor. Major Thomas McGreary is to be Purveyor to the forces—while his brother Private Robert McGreary, is to be inspector. Lt. Costigan is to have charge of the canteen. Privates Larkin and Connolly are to have something to do with the Commissariat Department, and have an eye on things generally. Captain Temple is to discharge the duties of Bugleman. The regiment will be in full marching order when parliament meets, and be prepared for the grit onslaught to be led by Col. Lanier at the head of the Quebec legion. But it is impossible to anticipate all the various officials who are to fill places in this very patriotic regiment, or indeed to say more about it until matters are more fully developed. We might say, however, that the band is nearly completed, and has learned several pieces of music very nicely, especially the "Rogue's March," which they play admirably, and it is expected that they will soon give a rehearsal in front of the Vice Royal Lodge in order that His Excellency may have an idea of the excellency of this new band and what is to be expected of it as soon as its wind gets stronger. It is also said that the editor of the St. John Sun is to be invited to become a member of the band and beat the big drum, and the editor of the Telegraph is to have the handling of the trombone, (a deep basso instrument) while the editor of the Globe is to exercise upon the kettle drum. The editor of Progress, it is said, will play the bagpipes.

MAKING GESE OF THEMSELVES.

We notice in the papers that a meeting was held last week in Montreal in reference to the teapot tempest which occurred in Bridgeport Conn., a short time ago, occasioned by the sailing into port of a St. John vessel without displaying the American flag. This embroglio was ridiculous enough, but in order to add fuel to the flames a certain number of Montrealers met, and after appointing some, got up a subscription for the purchase of a British flag to be presented to the captain of the vessel as a recognition of his great pluck and determination on that celebrated occasion. Now it transpires that the whole story was fabricated out of rotten cloth by some miserable news-monger, and that the story was as empty as the fellow's head. In the meantime, however, a meeting about as disgraceful as the one reported in Bridgeport—which turns out to be a lie—is called in a British press for the sole purpose of having a fling at our neighbors, and that is done by calling in the "old flag," or rather trailing it in the mire. It is such stupid deeds as this that have caused so many needless wars in the world, and sacrificed so much life and treasure. Suppose the story had been true—the captain's conduct must have been either right or wrong—if wrong, this Montreal action is like tacking up wrong-doing—he was right then it was the place of the authorities to make investigation and this no doubt would have led to amicable adjustment. But without being properly informed the Montrealers, or the donkey portion of them meet and splutter and thus would have imperiled any friendly relations had there been any truth in the story. But it has always been this way with some people.

The directors of the St. John Opera House advertise that they have completed arrangements with one of the largest and best opera companies that has ever visited that city and only require that a sufficient number of tickets be disposed of in order to fix the date. If they have made such arrangements why do they not announce what the company is. If they would do so they would dispose of their tickets quicker, but who is going to guarantee to take tickets until they know what they are buying for? Announce your company and the operation then there will be no difficulty in disposing of your tickets.

A NEGRO LYNCHEE.

For Assaulting a 15-year-old Girl? White on Her Way to School.
WARREN, Ark., Feb. 10.—Yesterday morning Miss Chloe Wright, of Wilmar, the 16-year-old daughter of Capt. J. Wright, was assaulted while on her way to school by Henry Beavers, a negro. To-night Beavers' body hangs from a tree in the village, and the road to his home lies through a strip of woods. When Miss Wright was about midway between her father's house and that of the nearest neighbor, she was met in the public road by Beavers, who made improper proposals. Then he seized her by the throat and choked her almost into unconsciousness, the latter with him in vain. Finally the girl fell out between her teeth, but her mother was coming, and in alarm Beavers fled from the spot. The alarm was given and the negro was soon found near 1 o'clock, and was then with his mother walking up the railroad toward Wilmar, only a short distance from the scene of his crime. When captured he manifested no desire to escape. He was taken to town, where he was surrounded by a mob, 150 strong. Thence he was led to Miss Wright's home for identification. When she recognized him immediately. Up to this time he had denied the charge, but upon identification he confessed. The crowd flocked about and placing Beavers in front, marched back to town, where they executed the principal thoroughfare. When this he was marched into the woods. When he crowd reached a suitable tree a rope which he negro had carried to the place at the request of one of the crowd was thrown over a limb about 25 feet high, and one of the party climbed up and fastened it securely. A horse was placed underneath, the negro was seated on its back, and the rope was adjusted. Then the horse was started and Beavers was left dangling in the air. Before the body could be lowered a volley of shots rang out and it was perforated with no fewer than 60 bullets. The negro was only 17 years old. He was a full brother of Will Beavers, who was hanged to a tree in the court yard at this place one year ago for an attempted assault upon a young white girl. Miss Wright is an attractive and popular young woman. Her father is a farmer and an influential citizen. She was lately injured, but will recover.

As Wealthy Career.

In France actors are not in the habit of taking the public into their confidence, and discussing their paltry private affairs on the stage. Abroad the regulations are not so strict, it seems. On the 17th of March last Herr Teweale celebrated, at the German Volks Theatre, the twenty-fifth anniversary of his first appearance on the boards, and in returning thanks for the numerous presents and congratulations he had received, he treated the audience to a retrospect of his career as an actor. The speech was very well received, and created a good deal of amusement. The subjoined fragment will give an idea of his racy character—"It is perfectly true gentlemen, that I went on the stage for the first twenty-five years ago, and I have acted 4,479 times since then. I have registered 2,312 lovers' vows; 1,935 young ladies and 480 widows have proved faithful to me; I have kept my vows 1,643 times and broken them 175 times. On 3,250 occasions war has broken out in our family. I have received by way of dowry 6,900,000 francs, 3,500,000 guineas, and 5,887,000 marks and now I can't tell where the money has gone to. Once only I married for love; ask my wife! I have received 3,030 invitations, 942 times I have been turned out; I have fallen 170 times into the hands of robbers, and I have had 2,480 mothers-in-law." At an historical exhibition recently held in Paris there were to be seen gloves of the Middle Ages and periods up to the present day. The exhibits clearly show that the small hands of the ladies are a product of modern civilization, as all the gloves known earlier times are decidedly above the average size. The finest of modern gloves are worn by the Queen Regent of Spain.

A Typical Englishman.
Maxim Stanhope, the London servant, is noted for his eccentricities. He had a mania for collecting curious old books which absorbed the greater part of his not inconsiderable fortune. Among other rarities he possessed a volume which he prized most highly, as he believed it to be the only copy extant. But learning one day that there existed in Paris another copy of the same work, he stuffed his pockets full of bank notes and set out for the French capital, where he drove straight to the address of his rival. After the usual preliminaries, the following conversation took place:
"Sir, you possess a copy of such and such a work."
"Quite right; the book is in my library. If you wish to look at it, here it is!"
"Very good, I'll give you 1,000 francs for it."
"Sir, I am not a dealer in books."
"5,000 francs."
"I repeat—"
"10,000 francs."
"Really, sir, I am not justified in refusing such an offer—here, the book is yours."
The Englishman paid down the money and received the volume. The scene of the interview was a large library, where a blazing fire was burning. Stanhope at leisurely examined his newly-acquired treasure, and then suddenly threw it into the fire with a satisfaction which he made no attempt to conceal. The Frenchman, in the belief that he had to do with a madman, tried to snatch the book out of the flames, but was stopped by his visitor, who calmly observed:
"Sir, I also have a copy of this work; it is now the only one that exists in the world. I wish you good morning."
At the Hub.
Landlord: "Have another pint of beer, Herr, Schulse?"
Guest: "Yes; but why aren't you drinking any to-day?"
Landlord: "I'm only waiting till they tap a new barrel."
A Modern Philanthropist.
Secretary of charitable association (to poor woman with four children): "Are you the wife of Muller, the copying clerk?"
The wealthy Herr Von Knicker called upon me this morning to draw my attention to your distressed circumstances. He told me that you were going to be turned out of your lodgings, as you could not pay your rent."
Woman: "Alas! that is so."
Secretary: "Who is your landlord?"
Woman: "That same wealthy Herr Von Knicker!"

Perkins's Little Joke.

One day Perkins entered a drapers shop with a friend. Ranged in front of the counter were a row of stools. Upon these the men seated themselves. In a moment a young assistant came up and asked Perkins what he desired. For an instant he seemed puzzled for a reply, but soon his eyes rested upon a sign, "If you don't see what you want ask for it." That furnished him with a cue. "Well," he said, "you can bring me a large plate of roast beef, outside cut preferred, plenty of gravy and mashed potatoes; also a cup of coffee. What's your's, George?" he added, turning to his friend. "Gimme the same," he responded. All the girls in the shop stared hard at the impudent fellow, and the assistant's eyes began to bulge. "Gentlemen," he replied, with a show of calmness, "you have made a slight mistake. This is a drapery establishment and not a restaurant. Do I look like a waiter?" "I am not here to answer questions, young man," said Perkins, as with his friend he rose and moved towards the door, "but if you can't fulfill orders you'd better go out of the business or take in your sign." And the jokers vanished out of the door. Perkins is still at large.
