A "LOST ART"

The masses have virtually forgotten or ost sight of the fact that true temperance onsists in moderation in all things, and not from abstaining from one (so-called) evil habit and giving the rein to every other form of mental and physical self-indulgence. In fact, now-a-days in Canada, moderation and true temperance is like contentment practically a "lost art." Those virtues which involve the least self-sacrifice are always the most popular. To abtain from iquor, for which we have no craving whatever but rather a strong repulsion, is infinitely easier than to control one's. appetite for food; put a rein upon the tongue, estrain habits of slothfulness, moderate that covetousness which is idolatry," which of women, keep within bounds the allabsorbing passion for dress and jewelery and social dissipation.
