Ellen Terry Paid High Honor; Gives Interview on Woman's Future

First Woman and First British Subject to Receive Medal from Founders of New Theatre.

By Harry Burton.

An Interview Especially for This Newspaper.

"The woman—the great, wonderful woman of the future?" she said. "Ah yes, she is coming. And she will be SO wonderful. She won't be a militant suffragette, and she won't be the glittering, icy heroine of Ibsen—she won't be the NEW woman at all. She'll be the only kind of woman that God planned. She'll be the great, complete, ABUNDANT woman—a woman of brain but of heart as well; a woman with depth, but a woman with the sunshine of life seeping all the way through her. Ah, she'll be a REAL woman!"

It was Ellen Terry who spoke. "Beautiful, complete, abundant" Ellen Terry, who has charmed kings, queens, schoolgirls, college men, poets and artists—the woman who inspired the famous picture of Sir Galahad, painted by her first husband, the great Watts, and the woman, too, whom Sir Henry Irving said was the ONLY woman who had the brain and the heart to act opposite to him.

The great actress was asked to talk on the "new woman" of the stage—the Ibsen woman, who feels the struggle for self-development going on in her veins, who thinks matrimony an inconsequential thing if it doesn't develop her.

"You see, it's this way," she began. "Women are just beginning to find their brains, and like any new movement, the pendulum always swings a little too far until it finds the real ear of its activity. In a little while women will remember that there is the supplemental half of the whole—the heart side. And then, for the first time in history, woman will have her full allotted sway. She will be a woman of heart AND brain. She will be the woman that Shakespeare, not Ibsen, pictured. "Shakespeare saw the true woman. He saw Beatrice, for instance, the Beatrice of 'Much Ado About Nothing.' What a woman was there! She had the milk of humanity in her veins. She had heart. She didn't always just reason, reason, reason, adding up sum after sum of lily-wrought, splendidly null syllogisms. But she makes those beautifully quick calculations that her heart aids in—those lovely, flashing considerations for others that we all love.

"Ibsen has his work to perform, to show us the woman opposite to the silly one the romanticists showed us. He had to prove woman had a mind entitled to consideration just as much as man's. He did his work well. Men see that a woman is a unity, not a half."

"Past masters proved the existence of woman's heart. Ibsen and the masters of today have proved her head, but it took the flashing mind of a genius like Shakespeare to look down the gallery of the centuries and show us what the REAL woman would be when she arrived. And he showed us the masterful Beatrice, and the masterful Rosalind, bounding with life AND brain. But he showed, too, what the latter-day dramatists have left out. That, after all, woman cannot get away from her greatest and God-given characteristic, her love for a mastering man."

"It is in woman to wish to look up to the mate of her heart and brain. But the trouble is women have been growing so much of late that they are not finding men capable of being mates of both heart AND brain. The women are ready enough to put men on their Providence-designed pedestals, but the men tumble off all the time, and now women are clever enough to see the fall. After they have picked them up seven or eight times, they get disgusted and become militant suffragettes and Ibsenites."

Perhaps the railway stations of Illinois illustrate most convincingly the vagaries of our nomenclature. From Peoria to Pekin in almost as brief an interval as it took King Solomon to fly on his magical carpet from one end of his realm to the other, while Cuba is only a few miles farther. Within the limits of that one state you can visit Bethany, El Paso, Joplin, Lisbon, Malta, Marseilles, Sorento Toulon, and still have room for Palmyra, Sparta, Genoa, Saxony, with a delightful disregard for history and geography as generally taught. Texas, which is nothing if not cosmopolitan, will show you a Dundee as well as a Midlothian, Athens, Carthage, Odessa, Poulton, Weimar. Iowa has a Grundy Centre in brave defiance of gossips. Arkansas courageously offers an Arkadelphia, Louisiana can boast of a Napoleontown, which would not cause Bonaparte any exaltation if he could tread its main street and beyond. One meets on the map in various states Memphis, Beta, Delta, Iota, Kappa, and Omega. Tennessee is not ashamed of its Chucky. The birds of the air and the fish of the sea alike give their names to places. Of recent years the tendency is spreading to call towns after famous people. Thus Texas has its Borne, Dickens, Dryden, Longfellow; Wisconsin its Caro; Minnesota its Verdi. This custom is commendable of course, but why Langtry should be retained is to be questioned. Paradise is frequently encountered, now and then Eden being given the preference. It remains for Georgia to recognize the situation by calling one of its towns Enigma.

Now it is easy to ridicule such vagaries of nomenclature, but what are towns to do? Are not the best names pre-empted? It is not always possible to take the founder's name and transform that, as Elberfeld sprang from L. Brown, Erastina from Erasmus Wyman, or Biltmore from Vanderbilt. Instead of duplicating and reduplicating existing names, must we have recourse to Firstville, Secondville, and so on, to Ninthundredville? Is it not an education, after all, to live in Athens, if in Georgia; in Caro, if in Illinois; and in Jerusalem Crossroads, although it happens to be in Oklahoma?

Study of Railway Folder Reveals Striking Incongruities—Sublime Often Blended With the Ridiculous.

(Harper's Weekly.)

The railroad folder, with its list of stations of varying degrees of importance, cannot be surpassed for the odd names it gathers, rivaling to the last the titles which the city director assumes for persons. It is not so much the mere repetition of names that excites surprise, but the oddity and nondescript character of so many. One may be charitable to 12 Bostons, 29 Charltons, 25 Dayton, 30 Washingtons, 28 Williamsburgs; but how can one tolerate Lone Jack Tip Top and Zuri in Virginia, Por Por in South Carolina, Paw Paw and Buncombe in Illinois, Gas in Kansas, Embarrass in Wisconsin, Ty-Ty in Georgia, Nay Aug in Pennsylvania, Killwog in New York, Plumwesp and Quaquequois in New Brunswick, to select only a few out of the many curiosities of nomenclature?

Not far from Scranton, Pa., is Tolyhama, and although a Judyville flourishes in Indiana, a Punchtown is still to be heard from. Ohio can point to Kinnick-Kinnick; Mississippi to Hushpuckena, Bobo, Nitta Yama and Alligator; Kentucky has a Ruth, Mississippi a Bona, Alabama a Chevolet; South Carolina its Sixty-Six, Ninety-Six and Ten-Mile; Georgia has a Doctortown, with a Noah and a Zebulon; Missouri has a Eve and a Lion. Nebraska an Eli; Minnesota a Sleepy Eye. We can understand the propriety of such graceful names as Fruitville, Citronella or Orangeberg, in the heart of a fruit section, or Furnace, Coalville, Irontown in the centre of a mining region. Why, however, should China, Asia, Palestine, Italy, startle us in Texas, an Alhambra amaze us near Los Angeles, with Goshen Junction not so distant? Some of the stations on the Southern Pacific remind one of the nomenclature

They think there is no balm in the Gilead of matrimony.

"But when men are ready, the women will be ready—the Beatrices and the Portias and the Rosalinds, who can give heart AND brain and show to a waiting world what TRUE companionship actually can be."

"I used to think like Ibsen myself. I did not consider men my superior mentally at all. I couldn't listen to them with patience when they tried to influence my acting. And then Sir Henry Irving sent for me. I recognized my master mind at once. I did anything artistically that he asked of me. We were made for each other. Ah, that was a beautiful partnership, where ideally two men fused and ran with blood and breathed with the air of life. It was almost too wonderful to be touched. The thought of our dramatic life fills me with only rever-

"And at the same time I had my home life. I wanted to be a full woman. I satisfied the Ibsen part of me—the brain—at the theatre. And at home came the heart part. Oh, the greatest ecstasy and the greatest agony on earth is to be a mother. Nothing can compare with it, and when the father is an ideal mate, the beauty of the relationship is heavenly. It is worth going through flood and fire for."

"When I get through my tour I shall go back to my home and my children in my rose garden in England. There time stops and no longer shall I be the old woman of sixty-two who has outlived the friends of her youth. I shall live the abundant, the complete, the perfect life—the life not only of brain, but the life of heart as well."
