

The Chairman, while thanking the meeting for the hearty vote of thanks they had given him, wished to assure the president that he had the greatest pleasure in presiding. It was most gratifying to hear the testimony as to the value of the work done by the society, given by a gentleman of such experience in the work of immigration as they had among them that day, and also to know that such care was taken in the selection of immigrants, so that Canada should not be made the dumping ground for all kinds of unsuitable persons. He would always be ready to help forward the cause of so valuable an institution by every means in his power.

The meeting then adjourned.
