Mr. Bulmer has requested The Gateway remove all copies of today's paper by 9 a.m. Friday or they will be removed by candidates taking down election posters today.

His request is a result of The Gateway's decision to editorially support the candidates the paper thinks would best serve the students' union. Mr. Bulmer feels this comes under the classification of campaign material and must therefore be out of sight at the latest by 9 a.m. Friday pursuant Gateway editor Al Scarth has refused the request and informed Mr. Bulmer any remaining Thursday papers will be taken off the stands early Thursday evening, then replaced after the candidates have removed their posters and other campaign material.

Mr. Bulmer said The Gateway can leave the papers out, but must be prepared for any legal con-sequences. "I'm not going to demand it, I'll request it in fairness to all the candidates.

While he has said that he will not press legal action, he will not speak for the candidates. "If there are no complaints that's fine. I'm not going to press action in the DIE Board."

Because of difficulty in interpreting the bylaw, there is some question whether such an editorial could be considered campaign material. The official definition of campaigning says in part, "any planned and organized public act by or on behalf of any person . . . to gain support for the

Sask. committee recommends police state Students uptight because expulsion possible if they forget library cards

SASKATOON (CUP) - A to "shake down' 'anyone on camspecial commission on student discipline at both campuses of the Univesrity of Saskatchewan may back down on submission of a report advocating some of the most hard-line disciplinary regulations in the history of Canadian universities.

The Carter Committee to renew discipline regulations at the U of S decided Wednesday to recommend their report not be brought before the university's Faculty Council at its next meeting February 26.

Students resist

The move follows a fast-increasing wave of resistance to the report, which students have described as "arbitrary," "repressive," and "fascistic."

If approved, the report would spell the end of virtually all student protest activity at the two campuses, institute the principle of double jeopardy for student behavior off-campus, allow students to be arbitrarily ejected from campus for no reason whatsoever, and give faculty the right pus for identification at any time.

All these are no-nos?

In the broadest of terms, the report prohibits:

- Any disobedience to any university regulation, Any student action which
- might be expected to create a disturbance at any university func-"Any conduct whether on or
- off university property, which may bring the university or any of its officers, employees or students into public disrepute,'
- · Any student action on university property which "creates, or which may be reasonably expected to create, a disturbance,"
- "Disruption of, or interference with" lectures, seminars or examinations,
- "Interfering with, or in any way disrupting" any meeting held by either administration or faculyt at any level,
- The use of public address systems on university property except when authorized by the student council,
- Failure to carry a library identification card.

Failure to obey the regulations could result in a warning, or suspension, expulsion or dismissal Carter, consisted of six faculty from the university, or imposition

Summary suspensions

In addition, the report recommends that any faculty and administrative person "who believes, or has reaseonable grounds to believe, that a student has acted in breach of any part" of the list of prohibitions, should have the power to summarily banish students from classes or from the university.

The report also recommends that administration principals and deans have the power to sum-marily suspend students from campus for three days without hearing.

Failure to comply with such evictions or suspensions would result in disciplinary hearings leading to the outlined penalties.

Hearings and punishment would be meted out by a discipline committee consisting of an administration vice - principal, three members of the university council, and three students appointed by the campus student council.

Closed meetings

The committee would meet behind closed doors, and have the power to suspend any accused student for the duration of his

The committee could also investigate alleged infractions of rules on its own accord, without complaint from any source.

The Carter Committee, originally appointed in November, 1968, to "review" existing disciplinary regulations at the U of S, made its report public January have since denounced the report, and denied committee claims that the document was passed in committee without opposition. At a teach-in on the report held February 12, Saskatoon students received support from committee member Doris Dyke, who said the university should give up all rights of discipline except in academic matters, and called for a revision of the provincial university act, which gives the academic senate the right to discipline stu-

"Not serious"

Student council president Rob Garden, who also sat on the Carter Committee, also disclaimed the report and explained he "Did not take the committee seriously, like a lot of other committees" he sits on.

Students at the forum called for creation of a new committee where students would have parity with faculty and administration, and called for rules which governed faculty and students equal-

Students endorsed a counterreport prepared by law students Larry Brown and Lenore Boyes which condemned the off-campus jurisdiction granted the university, opposed the arbitrary nature of the proposed regulations and demanded student-faculty parity in establishing disciplinary regula-

The U of S document is the fourth attempt, including U of A, by university administrators to impose new, tougher disciplinary regulations on their campuses.
