of any kind that Hester Ransome came to Vida Carolan. She was a donor rather than a recipient.

"So," she was saying, leaning back in her chair, and surveying with more than proud satisfaction—with triumph, the form before her, "you are going to Lady Mansfield's garden-party. Do you know who you are going to meet?"

"A few of them," Vida answered. "I dare say I shall in Resome new acquaintance. I was told—"

She paused and turned aside a little.

"You were told what?" asked Madame Ransome with suppressed eagerness.

"That Dare Devereux would be there," said the girl in a low voice, and the color rose to her pale cheek.

"Well," said Madame Ransome, sternly, after a moment's silence, "do you shrink from the contest?"

The girl lifted her head, and that dangerous look flashed into the road hazel

"Shrink from it; no!" she said, setting her teeth; "and yet—yet—" the white hand was pressed over her heart—"in one sense I do—I must. Not that I would one sense I do—I must. Not that I would draw back, do not think that; but it is a cruel task; nothing but such bitter wrongs as yours could nerve me to it!"

"Aye," said Hester Ransome, rising to her feet. "Remember, if ever you falter, because your modesty of womanhood ab-hors the task of trying to win a man's love—though south, to you there need be little trying—remember what I have suffered from Dare Devereux, and suffer still; for his anger is not yet appeased. And for what has he hunted me like a dog through every city in Europe? Be-cause his friend wasted his substance, at the gaming-table of my salon, and when all was gone, sought the coward's refuge of suicide. Was I bound to be Percival Claremont's guardian angel? He did as thousands have done, as thousands will do; and I—was I not what those who might have taught me better had made me? My husband was an adventurer; he lived as I lived after his death; he left me no provision but the career he had followed. Was I worse than others? Am I worse than others now? Who was Percival Claremont more than all the rest that I worked was the statement of the statement when the statement was the statement when the statement was the statement when the statement was the statement was statement. Am I worse than others now? Who was Percival Claremont more than all the rest, that I was to close my doors against him for his morals' sake? Would it have saved him if I had done so? Was not the world before him? and with the gambling fever on him, he would have played, do what I might to stay his hand, until he lost all. Yet it was I who lured him to his ruin, as though he had been a beardless boy; I, who drove him to his death; and for this Dare Devereux has pursued me from city to city for fourteen years; for this I am here in hiding; and if he knew where I had found shelter he would hunt me still—hunt me till I begged my bread in the street, or in my despair took my wretched life as did Percival Claremont."

She had hurried on, speaking not loudly, but with a frenzied excitement in voice and mien terrible to witness, and the more so that it was partially suppressed. As she paused, Vida, who had listened without word or movement, said under her breath:

"And now it shall be his turn to suffer

"Vida, has it ever crossed you that there is peril to yourself in this work that lies before you?"

"Danger! do you mean that I shall forget the wrong Dare Devereux has done to you?"

"Aye!" "Aye!"

Vida's answer was characteristic:

"I have finished it; men's hearts do not break," said the girl, rising to her feet with a short, scornful laugh.

"Not for most women's sekes, Vida, but for yours—Bah! do not start and look at me like that. Do you not yet fully realize your power?"

"Hush!" Vida said, trembling; "you wound me."

Certainly Hester Ransons

Certainly Hester Ransome could not Certainly Hester Ransome could not understand her child's nature, but she had tact, and could be silent, but she sighed inaudibly, a half impatient sigh, as Vida turned away to the window. She almost immediately recovered self-command, and came back from the window, but at that moment the roll of carriage wheels was heard outside, and a footman's thundering knock resounded through the house.

"It is Lady Marvyn," said Vidaquickly, and Madame Ransome began to assume her waterproof and bonnet.

Vida Carolan came out to the carriage in her cream-white cashnere and satin and ostrich plumes, and the odor of dainty perfume floated around her as she passed onwards.

FOR THE Kidneys, Liver and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—whatever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that searly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these therefore is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directachieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary Troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of imposters, initiations and leaves the statement of the system of the syst imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

She laughed as she almost flung the chair from her and commenced to walk rapidly up and down the room; but there was as much pain as triumph in the laugh; the nobler element in that complex and perverted nature was ever struggling sert itself: the woman's heart was shrinking from the unwomanly task revenge had set it. She went on, speaking passionately:

more passionately:

"You say well, how are you worse than others? Why is the man or woman who keeps the roulette-table worse than those who stake their gold? Nay, with the one it may be a living, with the others a fancy or a vice. Do they live such pure and holy lives that they can cast the stone? Adventurers! What, then, are these girls who surround one in the world of fashion—the world that decks itself in certain outward conventionalities, world of fashion—the world that decks itself in certain outward conventionalities, and in them poses as Virtue's self. I call that woman an adventuress, be she the daughter of a hundred earls, who makes of society a marriage market, and lives, moves, and has her being for no higher motive than to win a rich husband, and cares not what his life has been or is, so long as his purse is deen.

higher motive than to win a rich husband, and cares not what his life has been or is, so long as his purse is deep, and his settlements ample. After all, there is everything in a name. Run through the whole gamut of life, and we shall find that we are all holding up our hands in horror at those things which we ourselves do under other names, and other superficial conditions."

"True, Vida, true," said Madame Ransome; "but beware how you carry your argument too far; for there are both men and women who are good and noble, though my life has shown me mostly the black side of human nature; and, alast your life has not been one to teach you faith in your kind,"

Vida stopped, her hands were locked, and her bosom heaved.

"I wish I could have faith in my kind," she said, with an abrupt change of manners.

"I wish I could have faith in my kind, she said, with an abrupt change of manner. "I am young to be so cynical, so bitter; but I have seen little to give me that sunny view of things which belongs—so they tell us—to eighteen years."
