Google Hennessy's first day in the uniform of an American District messenger boy was eventful. In the morning he visited three of the principal clubs in town, made the acquaintance of a millionaire, from whom he received his first tip, a dollar, and also made an impression on all with whom he came in contact by reason of his bright, clean, honest face, which was a contrast to the weary, dull-looking countenances of some of the boys who had been longer in the business.

In the afternoon he posed for a cele-brated artist for twenty minutes and had brated artist for twenty minutes and had his features heatily sketched in a paint-ing of street urchins which afterward became famous and was exhibited abroad. He carried parcels abroad. He carried parcels from a fashionable caterer's to a house on Fifth avenue, where an awning stretched across the sidewalk indicated that a reception was in progress. Then there were notes and flowers to deliver, a cab to notes and nowers to deliver, a cab to be called and sundry small journeys that toward evening caused his feet to burn, for his mother, being anxious that her son should make a fitting debut in business life, had sent him forth in the morning wearing a pair of brand new shoes, shining, but of cheap material and not adapted to Google's new profession. The result was that he suffered much from this item of his he sunered much from this item of the attire, which, strangely enough, played an important part in his eventful day.

Google went home limping. When he reached the three tenement rooms where he lived with his mother, his first where ne lived with his mother, his first proceeding was to remove the offending shoes. His feet were swollen and burning, aching in every joint. Mindful of the evening's work that awaited him he admonished his mother that there was no time for detection. that there was no time for doctoring, and he attempted to get on his old shoes, but his inflamed feet absolutely refused to enter the discarded foot gear. Here was a dilemma.

To fail to return to night duty on this his first day meant certain dismissal from a place that he had waited nearly a year to obtain. For it was about twelve months before that Google's teacher at night school pro mised to get him a place as a messen-ger boy. He was then selling papers and reaping a very small profit with very hard work.

Now he looked hopelessly at his feet and his heart failed him and his lip trembled. What should he do? It was then the wisdom of Google's mother proved equal to the emergency. She stepped into the bed room and returned with a pair of her old button boots.
Without a word she knelt by Google and slipped them over his stockings. They went on softly and easily, and the boy sighed with relief as she but toned the cloth tops gently around his

He stood up smiling. His feet still pained him, but the anguish was over. He seized his cap and with a look at the clock hurried down stairs. He noticed as he did so that the old shoes he wore made no sound. The soles were worn so soft and thin that they were almost like cloth shoes, and there was no echo of his footfalls even when they struck the pavement outside.

It was dull in the office during the hours from 7 to 9 Google sat on a bench looking at his feet and thinking how narrowly his discharge had been averted by his mother's thought. The wind had begun to howl in the street too self-reliant in his manner. But there was one boy who rather took Google up and talked with him over his day's adventures. He confided to the new recruit that club calls were the most desirable and that his present from Mr. Ozden, the young million aire, was an event that augured well for his future. Google began to real ize dimly that his entrance upon a business career had been, in its way, a brilliant one.

It was about 10 o'clock when a man came in with a package, letting in a gust of cold air from the street. "I want one of your best boys," he said, "to take this at once to the labor atory of Mr. Franz Thayer at this adatory of Mr. Franz Thayer at this address. Can you send this boy?" he asked, designating Google. "There is no answer; take the car." He tossed a dime to Google, paid for the message and went out.

message and went out.
Google read the address on the stoutly corded box.
"Do you know how to get there?"
asked the manager. "Take a cable," and transfer to the blue car on this street. Get out at the number and if street. Get out at this number and if the elevator is stopped you'll have to climb. The lights may be out, but you'll find the man on the fourth floor."

Google took the package, feeling the importance of his commission in a manner that amused his fellow workers, who were congratulating themselves on a further stay in the warm this. He pulled on his cap and stepped out feeling the first gust of wind keenly, for the rules of the company parmitted him no overcost and pany permitted him no overcoat, and warm, it was hardly suited to a gale like this. As he waited for the car he

He read the word laboratory, wondering what it meant. Then his eye caught an inscription in the corner. It read: "One dozen ammonia guns."

Here was a mystery. Like all boys he was interested in guns. But he had never heard of ammonia guns. He watched the package in a fascinated way. The man called the transfer station and he got out and climbed on the blue cross town car.

He asked the conductor about the location of the number and was surprised to find that the man seemed to know Mr. Frantz Thayer quite well and called him " Professor." the car before the gloomy looking building the conductor designated. Business houses were on each side of it, all closed up for the night. The lower floor of the building itself seemed like some sort of shipping place. Two cabs, the horses blanketed, stood at the door. One of the drivers told Google to push in the door. He did so half afraid, and confronted a man reading a paper beneath a filekering gas jet. Google showed him the par-

"Get in," said the man, pointing out a small box like elevator; "I'll take you up; it's on the fourth."

Google stepped in and the man started the car upward. There were dim lights burning on the floors they nassed. When the car stopped with Google became conscious of the odor of flowers, the faint tinkle of mandolins and the sound of voices talking and laughing. It seemed rather like a dream to the boy when a man who looked like a waiter came forward and told him to sit down for a minute.

From the little office where Google sat down, wondering much, he saw a card with an address across it.

pleture that looked almost as though it "Yeu know where that is," he said, had been taken from a fairy-tale. There was a great high ceilinged room beyond the partition, along which a table was spread. Flowers and pink candle shades indicated that a feast had been in progress. Most of the guests had deserted the table and were gathered about a thin young man at one end of the room, who to Google looked like a magician.

A vast net of wires was stretched across the ceiling and there was throb bing somewhere of dynamos. The wall directly opposite the boy was studded with what seemed to him to be thousands of incandescent globes that burned dimly now, so that the gorgeously gowned women and the men in evening dress clustered about the professor-for Google was sure the pale young man was the professor-might ee a wonderful flame which he seemed to be creating and which riveted the attention of all as though fascinating them The music of the mandolins tinkled from the distance, while the engines throbbed like an accompani

The professor was speaking. His voice, cultivated, clear and musical, 'as heard plainly, for every one was there. silent now, leaning forward in the half darkness to see the wonderful flame which danced upon a small table, behind which stood the professor. This flame, it seemed to Google, was more of a light than a flame—a bubbling, gleaming light, now pink, now green, now opal, but above all a clear exquisite blue, which tint it seemed to retain steadily for several seconds be-fore it glanced off into other colors. Google advanced unconsciously nearer Google advanced unconsciously nearer and nearer, his softly shod feet making no sound. His breath was held at a tense, almost suffocating, pressure. Suddenly the professor raised a white hand, the tiny bubbling light went out suddenly, the thousands of bulbs upon the wall broke into a marnificant flood.

"Now, here is another curious thing," he said "I suppose you have all seen the ammonia guns made for the the original ammonia gun until he pretends to have a weapon that is like a toy in its workings, but is as efficaccious as a deadlier gun in rendering an opponent suddenly helpless. It is a contrivance, in short, by which you can knock a man down without hitting

The professor opened the box and took out a queer black rubber tube slightly trumpet shaped at one end. 'This is different in construction from the bicycle gun," he said. "but it is admirably simple. A child can manipulate it and any woman could use it successfully, for it does not require any perfection of aim. The inventor of this says that in time this gun may be one of the best means of defense against footpads and tramps. defense against footpads and tramps. He thinks that our police may be armed with them in time. Just step back a bit and I'll show you how it works." The guests drew back. The pro-fessor raised the little tube pistol fashion and took aim into space. There was a click and a puff, then a flannelshaped mist of ammonia that in a mo-ment made the air so dense with its fumes that the women coughed and a window was opened. The men drew around the empty gun with interest. Google stood transfixed. He was liv-

The professor nodded to a servant, who placed some dishes before Google. But the boy still hung entranced on the professor's words. He crumbled a macaroon in his fingers as he heard the women saying what an admirable weapon the gun would be for maids or nurses who took their young charges through the park.

"There would always be time to secure aid," said a pretty woman in black. "Yet one can't ask a nurse He left | maid to carry a revolver."

"Think of a thief in the night, said the professor. "A woman wakes and sees a burglar bending over her jewel case. Few women would have nerve enough to fire a loaded revolver. But this gun is comparatively noiseles and for the time as deadly as a pistol.'

The pretty woman in black st as the cool air swept the last drifts of the ammonia away.

"It is frightfully cold," she said, and I have only brought a cloth cloak."
"We can send for a warmer one," said Mr. Oyden. "I'il telephone to

"The telephone is out of order," said the professor. "I'm sorry; but let me send one of the men."
"No," said Ozden; here is the boy

Several pairs of eyes turned upon Google just as the mandelin music sounded again, and some of the guests began to waltz back into the shadows of the great laboratory. Google rose to his feet at Mr. Ogden handed him a giving him a coin, "and I know can trust you to deliver that message to Mrs. Ozden's maid.

"And here," said the professor, still smiling at the boy; "I saw that you were interested in the gun. I know that I can trust you with one also.

He handed one of the tissue wrapped tubes to Google, who bowed and went out on his soundless shoes to the elevator. He spoke not at all on his way to the street, but jumped on a car that was passing, having forgotten the pain of his swollen feet. Another transfer and he was walking up the steps of the house to which he had been

The man who let him in read the card and said to the boy: "Step up to the next floor and give this to Mrs.

Then he heard a clock chim softly and went in the direction of the sound. It seemed to the boy as though his feet were frezen to the rug upon which he stood as his frightened eyes caught the sight disclosed through the

The room was dimly lit and was like a great pink sea shell, the walls and celling being tented over with soft silk. In one corner, bending over a dressing table, stood a man that Google had no difficulty in recognizing as a thief. From the table and its various receptacles the burgular was dexter-ously lifting jewels that shone in the pink light much as to the boy's be-wildered brain, the magic light had done in Professor Thayer's laboratory. From below came a burst of laughter. The servants' hall was enjoying a party while the master and the mis-wind had begun to how! In the date with the great round stove until its sides grew red and the basement room was grew red and the basement room was cosey and warm.

The boys who sat by Google eyed him over, as boys do in all walks of him over, as boys do in all walks of him over much on life, not trusting him over mu citement that was hysterical. But through his youthful brain came the first signals of duty, duty to his new career as he saw it, for all day long he had been keenly conscious of a sense of responsibility. He did not know it use of bicyclists in case of an attack by of responsibility. He did not know it dogs? This fellow has improved on at the time, but he was seizing an op portunity, and guided by some courage born of something within him he ad-vanced on his soft shoes, the gun clutched in his cold hand.

The man was bent over a lower drawer in the dressing case. As Google reached his shoulder he looked up and in the mirror saw the boy's up and in the mirror saw the boys gleaming eyes, eyes that looked, as Big Leary afterward said, like those of a panther. With an oath he looked over his shoulder, and then the new invention had its first practical test, a test that made it afterward famous, for the boy and man fell over on the floor, the boy yelling as he saw the burglar's livid face looking up gasping from the

The maid, who had been asleep in nouse, except Mrs. Ogden's maid, had been decoyed by the ruse of a confeder-ate and a case of champagne sent as a gift to one of the girls. The police appeared and Big Leary, one of the cleverest of thieves, who never touched anything but big hauls like this, was soon safey behind the bars.

It is true that Google's part in the transaction did not come out in the public reports. It was some time babegan to feel the responsibilities of the strenuous life. This was far different from the profession of selling papers. He took a seat in the car with the box on his knees, and after he had paid his fare studied the address again.

Suddenly he feit the touch on his fore that story was told, for Google was taken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the hospital with pneumonia arm, and looking up he saw the smiltaken to the control of sound sense in the cut with the utmost a world of sound sen

He has doffed his uniform and is learning to be an electrician in the laboratory of Professor Franz Thayer, the inventor. He had his choice of several careers, but the magical blue light still danced before him and showed him the way to his future.

CHATS WITH YOUNG MEN.

Our lives would present a grand re cord if we lost no opportunity to do good. "Some one has said never delay to do the duty which the moment brings, whether it be in great or small things For who doth know what he shall do upon the coming day." Then let us try to do our best, for the very longest life is but a drop in the ocean of eternity, so let uslive and love together

The Cigarette Habit.

The cigarette habit is growing day by day with the young. In fact, in now-a days it is a rare thing to see youngsters even at the ages of six, seven and eight, who can't smoke the poisonous things. Many of them can smoke them with a certain air of independence and boldness that would quite astonish older heads.

In New York City a few days ago two boys were arrested for stealing thousands of cigarettes from a tobacco store. On being brought before the juige, one of them was asked the fol lowing questions:

1. What possessed you to rob all the cigarettes in the store?

The Courage

We make an unfortunate mistake if we let the failures and disappointments of the past cloud our horizon. Many lives are like century plants; they burst into bloom only after a long and tedious interval. The hard work, the patient endurance, the courage in bear ing losses and trials, at length on some favored day bring forth their result and the man is suddenly overwhelmed at the transformation of his life in the fruition of long-cherished hopes. No one of us can tell when we are standing on the verge of such a crisis. Many a man, like Saul at Gilgal, has become discouraged just too soon and lo! a little after he has committed himself to a false and weak policy the prophet has come and he finds that he the next room, sounded an alarm that rang threugh every corner of the house. It reached the party in the hall down stairs, where the private watchman and every servant in the bouse, except Mrs. Orden's maid had veer bring you the fruitage of your bring, you the fruitage of your year bring you the fruitage of your hopes, the transformation of life, which s as wonderful and yet as possible as the change which comes to the earth in May, when the warm rains and the mounting sun suddenly work the miracle of the spring time, when the cold and barren earth, as in response to the touch of an invisible wand, blooms with verdure .- Watchman.

Heroes or Valets?

frequently accepted as a sign of superior discernment. Most men are too ready to assume that the fault finder really knows what he is talking about : while, as a matter of fact, his carping criticism often conceals the most superficial acquaintance with the matter. It is sometimes one's duty to criticise, and to criticise sharply; high standards, sound methods, and common honesty make frankness of speech imperative. But this kind of occasional criticism is a very different matter from the chronic habit of commenting on the weaknesses and failings of others into which too many people fall. This detestable habit brings its own penalty with it; for the criticism which which is always at work loses its effectiveness, and the man or woman who gives it expression ceases to count save as a grumbler and cynic. Moreover, there is nothing so wearisome as the constant questioning of people's motives and the constant condemnation of their acts. A little criticism of this kind goes a long way; a very little more converts the cynic into a bore, a role than which there is no more humiliating known among men. There would be very much less of this kind of censoriousness if, in-stead of being accepted as evidence of keen discernment, it was regarded as evidence of shallow perception. For shallow perception it generally is, and the man or woman who is always seeing the weakness of others is usually an egotist-one who cares more for himself than for others, and whose moral nearsightedness prevents him from seeing anything more of the sun than the spots on its surface. "It is said," writes Goethe, 'that no man is a hero to his valet. That is only because a hero can be recognized only by a hero. The valet will probably know

That all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy is a proverb that has come to be applied only to children, for the reason perhaps that Jack is re-ferred to as a boy, but it is true of adults as well as children, though not perhaps in the same sense. The tired business man needs change of occupation rather than rest or even play to enable him to recuperate. As astonishing amount of work is performed by men who find relaxation in some line entirely different from their ordinary occupation. The serious student whose brain grows weary with deep study may find relief in a light work of fiction or at the play. The popularity of some of the lighter forms of entertainment—farces, vaudeville shows and comic operas—is doubless due to the fact that they demand no thought, but help to drive away dull care and afford amusement and rest for a few hours. The serious drama, the lecture, studies of art or of science afford similar relief, though of a different kind, to those whose daily work is mechanical and who feel the need of mental exercise. That which is work for one man becomes play for another. There is danger to the nervous organization where one parsists in a single line of mental activity with no rest or relaxation except during the hours of sleep. To be mentally healthy one should take an interest in widely different things and exercise all his faculties. Basiness is of the first im-portance, and, the daily task being done, everything at all related to business should be set aside for something entirely different-mechanical work, we have a craze for cigarettes, we if the business is one that employs only thought it better to put up a supply for the future.

Each of us smokes ten packages.
This last answer, no doubt, must have set the judge thinking. In a few years these two youths will wind up by being sent to an insane asylum.

Fortunate is the man of affairs who develops some kind of fad with which to occupy his mind in his leisure hours. It may or may not be useful in the ordinary sense of the term, but it will be useful to the term to th by affording him diversion from the cares of business. Playing constantly upon one string wears it out sooner than if one plays upon a number, and there are many men who have worn themselves out when they should be in their prime by devoting their minds to one subjectusually money getting. Their pro-gram is to amass a fortune quickly and then enjoy life, but it is very seldom then enjoy life. but it is very sendom carried out. They may succeed in amassing the fortune, but find them selves broken in health or incapable of enjoying life except in the drudgery of the counting -room. They have been rendered dull boys, in one sense of the term backure thay have head sell. of the term, because they have had all work and no play. It is better to make sure of the enjoyment of life while prudently taking care at the same time of one's business interests. And the way to do that is to seek rational rest and relaxation from business cares in widely different fields of mental activity when the office is closed, instead of carrying home one's books or papers for work over time.

Individuality in Business.

Individuality counts for a great deal in business. Just as there are lots of people who can talk fluently who can not sit down to write anything without immediately becoming some one else and expressing thoughts, aims and ideas that are entirely foreign to their true nature, so there are in the commercial world many who do not do themselves justice for the same reason. Every business that rises above the ordinary portrays in many of its f a tures the individuality of the govern-ing spirit back of it. Somebody con-faculty as applied to others is own best judgment with implicit confidence that if the result wasn't successful it would at least be such as to suit his ideas as to how it should be conducted. The great trouble with the average man who copies the methods of others is that he very often gets poorer ideas in this way than he has himself, if he only sets his own mind in motion along the proper lines.

After all, why should any one copy after some other fellow when he can create methods for himself which are more appropriate, more natural; that are more a part of himselt? Of course, it is all well enough to look about you and try to learn by ob-servation, but learning and copying are entirely different. Probably no shoe manufacturer who copied the styles of another ever made as good a copy as the original was, and the great trouble is that, after all, it is only a copy, and as such advertises the goods of the originator of the style more than

There is room for originality in every department of a business. What if somebody else or a whole army of people have been in the habit of doing things a certain way, that doesn't make it the right way or the only way, by any means. A business man should strive after correct originality as he would to find a priceless treasure, because it attracts the attention of the buying public as nothing else will. Originality in every sphere of life is at a premium, and though people may criticise it, they still pay homage to it. The men who have made great successes in business have been the originators. They have broken away from the shackles of conventionalism and have set themselves apart from the great mass of humanity, who are followers and not leaders.
