MORTON & HERITY, PROPRIETORS

TALIAN YOUTH BOUND OVER TO KEEP THE PEACE

Charge of "Attempt" Falls in Police Court—Conviction for Vagrancy Against Rizzo and Walters—Italian Woman Expressed Fears for Her Safety—Story of the Letter.

From Tuesday's Daily... The young lady whose name has been associated with the twin as a result of the prosecution by the authorities was the first witness called by Crown Attorney Anderson when the trial was resumed on Monday afternoon.

The girl who is 17 years of age is named Mary. Being sworn, she said she recognized the two prisoners. They had come to the restaurant where she was working on Monday, March 15th. They secured a room and remained there until Saturday night, when they were arrested. They had only two meals at the "house." Both were present on Thursday afternoon and then had a conversation with Mary. One asked her to go to the show. She refused. He asked her if she was working at the restaurant or living there. She replied she was working there. She was sent asked what wages she was getting. She told him he had a restaurant in Toronto at 50 Queen street and asked her to go there to work for him. He would pay $18 per month wages, with expenses for her mother and two children. He said he would go with him on Tuesday, that he would see that her way was paid and advised her not to tell her mother. She did not consent to go. One of the results was that in the restaurant, Walters and Rizzo on the sofa and Walters was putting coal in the stove at the time.

Later they came in for a meal but did not eat. On Thursday night Walters brought his lamp to the room, filled it with oil and set it up with a kerosene. In the evening she was passing the room of the Italian and Walters called her and told her to come to the room. She brought this back, he gave her a key, which was produced.

A ROMANTIC NOTE... It was dated Belleville, March 19th, 1914, and signed by "Rizzo." It writes "I am going to Toronto, Ontario, and I want to come to Toronto, all will be arranged to take you. In the city, have a good time there. Dress you in respectable conditions. And I love you. If you love me, I'll be the only boy for you."

"You broke my heart the day I came in. I will love you... With the signature was the drawing of a heart with a star attached to it.

After the crown attorney read the note, the witness resumed. She did not flirt. Walters did not say she was a married man. He did not give his name. She did not know he was working by proxy. Walters did not say he was giving the note for the other man.

Mr. Carnew—Witness had never been in Toronto. The youths did not interfere with her. The man did not say whether the $18 included lodgings and board. On Friday night she told her mother she was going to Toronto. Witness said she would not go with strangers anyway. She took no stock in the note. They did not offer any money, ribbons, etc.

The manager of the restaurant testified that the men took care of their room. They had the key. No one had entered the room. The revolver was not in the dresser drawer when the Italians took the room. Rizzo paid the money for the room. Walters and Rizzo made a financial impression upon witnesses. Walters gave a $10 bill and again a $50 bill and Rizzo a $20 bill in making small purchases on the first afternoon and evening. They kept reasonable hours.

Nicolaia Argentina, living in Belleville for the past two months, testified that she had lived in Rizzo's lodging house and restaurant corner Pearl and York streets, Toronto, for two years. She had seen Walters at the fruit store of Boni was a partner of Rizzo. Rizzo got jealous of di Boni and manifested his passion by fighting and swearing. di Boni said they might as well have the game as the name. Rizzo did not give her any money. Everything she bought she purchased with money she earned. Rizzo threatened that wherever he would find her he would "teach" her up.

She was married 14 years ago but her husband had been living with another woman and she could not marry. She had heard there were four men in town looking after di Boni and herself. Rizzo had told her he had $400 in the bank and would spend every dollar of it causing her trouble. She said she was an Italian herself and knew the temper of the Italians. She was acquainted with lots of Italian girls in Toronto who had had their faces slashed by jealous Italians. di Boni was called, but at the junction a conference between the coun-

Many have been blessed in secret inwardly the process of redemption is secret. If you love Christ, have you said "If you are my servant, my soldier, do you wear my livery, do you carry my colors?" Shall His name be blasphemed and ignored and you not confess that you love Him? May God put courage into all our hearts to declare ourselves. He declared. Will you declare? Why not?

The woman was going away with her mother and sister. She had a good cheer of Christ is always reserved for His true confessors. It may be possible to get to heaven along the private way, but get out on the highway. Men do not know what they are losing by following Christ secretly.

MR. LANE AT EMMANUEL

Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal church was crowded to the doors last evening, Mr. W. R. Lane, the soldier evangelist of London, England, was the preacher. His method is that of exposition. He does not use the time-worn tactics of the evangelists, which many dislike but makes his appeal to reason and the soul rather than the pure sentiment. His text was St. Luke chap. 8 "And Jesus said who touched Me?" The evangelist first drew the frame of the picture he desired to paint. He then said to the audience "I saw a woman with the ail secret in her heart. She touched Me." He then said to the audience "I saw a woman with the ail secret in her heart. She touched Me." He then said to the audience "I saw a woman with the ail secret in her heart. She touched Me."

She touched the hem of His garment. She felt a thrill. She was young—once more. There she stood, rushing away, bidding herself, "Who touched me?" Not for information's sake, not out of anger, but because He was teaching and training her in the depths and emancipating her from their own narrow Jewish religion; for the sake of the multitude, and ourselves, Jesus was sent to the Holy Land. He was speaking for all ages. Even Peter and John were not in the secret. The woman touched the hem of His garment in Christ. This woman touched the hem of His garment in all places. The woman secured the blessings in a bustling city street. What a difference between thronging Christ and touching Christ. Jesus is always passing by, but we do not touch Him. We have been blessed by the Saviour Himself. He is the symbol of His Passion. He is the symbol of His Passion. He is the symbol of His Passion.

Speaking about governments there does not appear to be very much difference between the police, advocated by some of our politicians, and the law. The law is made to punish the man who has broken the law. The law is made to punish the man who has broken the law. The law is made to punish the man who has broken the law.

The "You're Another" Argument. Speaking about governments there does not appear to be very much difference between the police, advocated by some of our politicians, and the law. The law is made to punish the man who has broken the law. The law is made to punish the man who has broken the law. The law is made to punish the man who has broken the law.

What About Sir Farmer? An exchange in speaking about the titles of Knighthood conferred in Canada since 1867 when the coveted honor was first introduced, makes some interesting comments. Up to the present time Canadians to the number of 116 have farmers have the consoling assurance that the best way to prepare for this title is to study law. That is encouraging to the ambitious boy who would like his party to get the honor, and it is to some degree a knight of the garter, etc. It is a wonder some boys leave the farm when we believe it is generally admitted that the cleverest professional men spent their early years on the farm. Why is it that out of this 116 who have been honored with Knighthood the man who above all others is looked upon as the one that can best be done without in the upbuilding of the nation is not permitted to share in these honors? There are Agricultural men and Stock men in Canada to-day who have done as much or more to warrant the title of Knighthood being conferred upon them than some who have received the honor. Just look at the list: 25 Cabinet ministers, 20 big business men, 12 Lieutenant Governors, 12 Railway men, some of whom are included in the list of the big business men, 8 Provincial Premiers, 5 Dominion Premiers, 4 Soldiers, 3 Physicians, 3 Civil Engineers, 2 Educationalists, 2 Authors, 2 Civil Servants and 2 Journalists. Will not a farmer or one of Canada's distinguished women are included in the list or one of the many noted Canadian inventors or manufacturers to whom Canada owes as much as any other country? Why should not the boys on the farm have the same encouragement in their profession as any other? So he is simply told, he is not fitted for any distinction of that kind so long as he remains on the farm. If he has any ambitions for Knighthood, no matter how much he may have distinguished himself as an agriculturist or breeder of stock, in order for him to secure this honor he must study law. We are not told that it is really necessary to be even a success in the profession. Perhaps if Col. the Hon. Sam. Hughes took a something doing. It certainly would be something out of the ordinary routine of political affairs if the Governor General should recommend to the King one of our distinguished Agricultural men for Knighthood as a success in the profession.
