Mothers to Teach Children to Breathe Through the Nostrila.

HILDREN should be taught early in life to breathe through the nose. This is important for health's sake, and also for children's looks for nothing gives a more foolish and unattractive appearance to a face than the habit of going about with the lips apart. According to a Hindoo legend, this is the proper origin of woman: Twashtri, the god Vulcan of the Hiudoo mythology, created the world. as the children of the forest only know how to be when no danger is nigh and big mamma is present to warn and watch over them.

But where is mamma? Ah! here looks up and down the stream, sniffs the air, and, seemingly satisfied that ly walks out in midstream and takes a drink. The little ones by this time are cavorting like two kittens, splashing the water and making a great deal of noise. Mamma is afraid evidently, there is too much noise, for she backs out of the water, and the little ones obey her instructions and reluctantly follow.

Fortunately there is quite a clearing along the left bank, and slowly and stealthily backing about ten feet up the hill, I gain a position where I can plainly see mamma and the babies without being seen or heard.

The old lady is quietly feeding, nipoing the tender branches with much relish. MOTHER DOE AND HER FAWN

Hark! What's that? Looking intently toward the point, I see two tiny spotted toddlers wading out from the bushes, says a writer in Forest and Stream. Not mere than four or five feet, but there they are as plain as life can make them. They are certainly not over two or three weeks old, spotted like two leopards, ears so large and awkward looking, their knees hardly seem able to support their ungainly little bodies, but happy comes the stately old dame. Fist she puts only her nose out of the bushes, all is well, she slowly and majestical-

The doe is a big female. She weighs 200 pounds. She wears her spring and summer garment-her red petticoat. The duties of maternity evidently agree with her, for she is sleek and fat. Now mamma compels the toddlers to stop eating, and even gives the largest of the fawns a slight tap more sustenance. This furry thing

How proud mamma looks! there ever two such lovely fawns? Not to her way of thinking. After having run about ten times, they evidently tire and come up to partake of the maternal font. But instinct teaches that it is not good to eat when so heated from violent exercise, so the mother leads them to water. lets them drink, and then again tempts them to repeat their performance of running and romping. It strikes me the mother has an object in view. Can it be to teach her young to gain strength and surefootedness? I think so. Now the two urchins come tumbling down the hillside with an impetuosity that is undeniable. The smaller one of the two is enabled to stop just at the water's edge, but the baby buck is coming so quick and he has so little control of himself, he tumbles from the embankment and falls with a resounding splash into the water, and then be gins to bleat exactly like a calf, as much as to say: "Mamma, mamma, sister pushed me in the water. Forgot Their Sorrow.

In his autobiography, "The Making of an American," Jacob A. Riis tells an amusing story of a visit he once made to the house of three sisters whose brother had been drowned: "It was a very hot July day, and to guard against sunstroke I had put a cabbage leaf in my hat. On the way over I forgot all about it, and the leaf, getting limp, settled down snugly on my head, like a ridiculous green skullcap. Knowing nothing of this, I was wholly unprepared for the effect my entrance, hatless, had upon the weep ing family. The young ladies ceased crying, stared wildly and then, to my utter bewilderment, broke into hysterical laughter. For the moment thought they had gone mad. For some years afterward the thought of it had the same effect upon me that the cabbage leaf produced so unexpectedly in that grief stricker home."

Nothing Like MALT BREAKFAST FOOD For Nourishing and Making The Little Ones Happy

The proper feeding and nourishing of the child just after weaning should engage the most serious attention of he mother. The majority of prepared foods produce irritation of the stomach and bowels because of their improper and scientific manufactures, This irritation of the digestive organs develops into serious complications that often prove fatal Malt Breakfast Food is the ideal health food for our little ones. It is entirely free from starchy substances, easily digested and assimilated, is richer in flesh and bone producing ele-ments than all other foods, and has a deliciousness that at once captivates the taste of every child. If you desire to see your child grow up strong, try the effects of Malt Breakfast Food for a few weeks and note well the results. Your grocer can supply you.

The Nankin.

Nothing is so humorous as the writings upon etiquette by people to whom such knowledge is a sealed book. A cookbook which extends its branches of information in many directions is responsible for the following: "Always pin your napkin to your dress when at dinner, that it may not fall under the table. It may be pinned so that the pin cannot be seen."

Imagine a dinner table full of men and women returning to the drawing room, each wearing a serviette apron which he or she has forgotten to unpin! -New York Times.

Nature "makes all things beautiful n their time." Every one of life's easons, when life moves on Nature's ines, has its own charm and beauty. Many women dread that period whe they must experience change of life, fear that face and form must suffer by the change, and that they may fail to please those whom they love. The value of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription in this crisis of voman's life lies in the fact that it assists Nature. Its use preserves the balance and buoyancy of the mind and sustains the physical powers. Many omen have expressed their gratitude for the help and comfort "Favorite Prescription" in this trying period. Its benefits are not passing but permanent and conduce to mental happiness as well as physical strength.
