Selected Literature.
Leaves have their Time to Fall.
Leaves have their time to fall, And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath, And stars to set—but all, Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh, Death!
Day is for mortal care: Eve for glad meetings round the joyous hearth; Night for the dreams of sleep, the voice of prayer— But all for thee, thou mightiest of the earth. The banquet hall its hour, Its feverish hour of mirth, and song, and wine; There comes a day of grief's o'erwhelming power, A time for softer tears—but all are thine.
Youth and the opening rose May look like things too glorious for decay, And smile at thee—but thou art not of these. That wait the ripened bloom to seize their prey.
Leaves have their time to fall, And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath, And stars to set, but all— Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh, Death!
We know when the moon shall wane— When Summer-birds from far shall cross the golden grain— But who shall teach us when to look for thee? Is it when Spring's first glaze Comes forth to whither the violets lie? Is it when roses in our path grow pale? They have one season—all are ours to die!
Thou art where billows foam— Thou art where mists melt on the air; Thou art around us in our peaceful home, And the world calls us forth to meet thee there.
Thou art where friend meets friend, Beneath the shadow of the elm, at rest; Thou art where foe meets foe, and trumps, and feathers to match.
The skies, and swords beat down the princely crest.
Leaves have their time to fall, And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath, And stars to set, but all— Thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh, Death!
—Felicia Hemans.

SENTENCED TO BE SHOT.
Farmer Owen's son had been found asleep when doing sentinal duty, and he was sentenced to be shot. A telegram had been received by his father saying that sentence would be out in twenty-four hours. Mr. Allen, the minister, called to do what he could to comfort the sorrowing family. During his visit a letter arrived. Blossom, the farmer's little daughter, opened the door and received it. "It is from," was all she said.
It was like a message from the dead Mr. Owen took the letter, but could not break the envelope on account of his trembling fingers, and held it towards Mr. Allen, with the hopelessness of a child. The minister opened it and read as follows:—
"DEAR FATHER,—When this reaches you—I shall be—in—eternity. At first it seemed awful to me; but I have thought about it so much now, that I have no terror. They say they will not blind me nor blind me, but that I may meet my death like a man. I thought, father, that it might have been on the battlefield for my country, and that when I fell, it would be fighting gloriously; but to be shot down like a dog for nearly betraying it! to die for neglect of duty—Oh, father! I wonder the very thought does not kill me! But I shall not disgrace you. I am going to write you all about it, and when I am gone you may tell my comrades. You know I promised Jimmie Carr's mother I would look after her boy; and when he fell sick I did all I could for him. He was not strong when ordered back into the ranks, and the day before that night I carried all his luggage, besides my own on our march. Toward night we went on a double quick, and though the luggage began to feel very heavy everybody else was tired too. As for Jimmie, if I had not lent him an arm now and then, he would have dropped by the way. I was all tired out when we went into camp, and then it was Jimmie's turn as sentry, and I would take his place; but I was too tired, father, I could not have kept awake though a gun had been pointed at my head; but I did not know it until—well—until it was too late."
"God be thanked," said Mrs. Owen. "I knew Jimmie was not the boy to sleep carelessly at his post."
"They tell me to-day I have a short reprieve—time to write to you—our good Colonel says. Forgive him, father, he only does this duty; he would gladly die for me. And do not lay any death against poor Jimmie. The poor boy is broken-hearted, and does nothing but beg and entreat them to let him die in his stead."
"I can't think of mother and Blossom. Comfort them, father. Tell them I die as a brave boy should, and that, when the war is over, they will not be ashamed of me as they must be now. God help me; it is very hard to bear. Good-by, father. God seems near and dear to me, as if he felt sorry for his poor broken-hearted child, and would take me to Him—in a better, better life."
"To-night I shall see the cows coming home from pasture, and precious little Blossom standing on the stoop, waiting for me, but—I shall never—never—"

"God be thanked," said Mrs. Owen. "I knew Jimmie was not the boy to sleep carelessly at his post."
"They tell me to-day I have a short reprieve—time to write to you—our good Colonel says. Forgive him, father, he only does this duty; he would gladly die for me. And do not lay any death against poor Jimmie. The poor boy is broken-hearted, and does nothing but beg and entreat them to let him die in his stead."
"I can't think of mother and Blossom. Comfort them, father. Tell them I die as a brave boy should, and that, when the war is over, they will not be ashamed of me as they must be now. God help me; it is very hard to bear. Good-by, father. God seems near and dear to me, as if he felt sorry for his poor broken-hearted child, and would take me to Him—in a better, better life."
"To-night I shall see the cows coming home from pasture, and precious little Blossom standing on the stoop, waiting for me, but—I shall never—never—"

SENTENCED TO BE SHOT.
Farmer Owen's son had been found asleep when doing sentinal duty, and he was sentenced to be shot. A telegram had been received by his father saying that sentence would be out in twenty-four hours. Mr. Allen, the minister, called to do what he could to comfort the sorrowing family. During his visit a letter arrived. Blossom, the farmer's little daughter, opened the door and received it. "It is from," was all she said.
It was like a message from the dead Mr. Owen took the letter, but could not break the envelope on account of his trembling fingers, and held it towards Mr. Allen, with the hopelessness of a child. The minister opened it and read as follows:—
"DEAR FATHER,—When this reaches you—I shall be—in—eternity. At first it seemed awful to me; but I have thought about it so much now, that I have no terror. They say they will not blind me nor blind me, but that I may meet my death like a man. I thought, father, that it might have been on the battlefield for my country, and that when I fell, it would be fighting gloriously; but to be shot down like a dog for nearly betraying it! to die for neglect of duty—Oh, father! I wonder the very thought does not kill me! But I shall not disgrace you. I am going to write you all about it, and when I am gone you may tell my comrades. You know I promised Jimmie Carr's mother I would look after her boy; and when he fell sick I did all I could for him. He was not strong when ordered back into the ranks, and the day before that night I carried all his luggage, besides my own on our march. Toward night we went on a double quick, and though the luggage began to feel very heavy everybody else was tired too. As for Jimmie, if I had not lent him an arm now and then, he would have dropped by the way. I was all tired out when we went into camp, and then it was Jimmie's turn as sentry, and I would take his place; but I was too tired, father, I could not have kept awake though a gun had been pointed at my head; but I did not know it until—well—until it was too late."
"God be thanked," said Mrs. Owen. "I knew Jimmie was not the boy to sleep carelessly at his post."
