In Love Though Married.

By RUTH CAMERON.

When a man finds out after marriage that the beauty which he admired during courtship is largely artificial we do not blame him for being disappointed in his bride and losing some of his love for her.

Is not the man who has been attracted by certain qualities of character or temperament, and who finds that these also are removable just as little to be blamed for losing his ardor?

Indeed, I think he is more unfortunate than the other, for his love, having been founded on something deeper and more real than beauty, is probably deeper and more real, and hence his disappointment is keener.

Despite the belief to the contrary, comparatively few men are attracted merely by beauty. For one thing, comparatively few women are that beautiful. Most men fall in love with a woman because that woman has certain qualities in temperament or character which arouse that peculiar compound of passion and tenderness known as sex love.

Now almost any woman is astute enough to know what qualities in her particularly attract her lover. She can feel his access of tenderness when she displays these particular qualities, and she learns to give them free play during the courtship.

After marriage? Well, that's another matter.

We often hear protests against woman's tendency to grow slovenly in her personal appearance after marriage. Now I think the average woman shows a greater tendency to grow slovenly in the use of her other charms.

For instance, once upon a time a young girl who was rather sweet looking, but not really pretty, captured the handsomest and nicest bachelor in her set. People wondered at her good fortune, but it was really simple enough. She was an enthusiastic, vivacious, unconventional little person, and he happened to care more for those qualities than for beauty.

That was about ten years ago. The other day I was sorry to hear that the man in the case has been taking his stenographer about. Sorry but not surprised for the vivacious, enthusiastic, unconventional little person whom he fell in love with and married ten years ago, is now a settled down, thoroughly conventional, matter-of-fact housewife, middle aged long before her time. People wonder at her poor little fool—by much the same kind of a vivacious, enthusiastic, unconventional young person as the girl he loved ten years ago—and lost.

Isn't such slovenliness as bad as carelessness about one's person?

Men fall in love with women for many qualities—for their sweetness, their lack of sophistication, their vivacity, their good humor, their purity, for their elusiveness, for the flavor of the child in them, etc., etc.

Every woman should know what quality in her particularly attracts and try to be as careful about preserving it as she is to keep looking young.

Do you know what quality in you attracts your husband? Reader, friend, and are you keeping that quality untarnished?

Costa Rica.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Slivash." Costa Rica is a free and unharnessed republic which used to get a little publicity in the foreign news until Mexico came along and hogged the whole show.

The name "Costa Rica" signifies "Rich Coast." It was named by the Spaniards, who conquered the country in 1530 and then hunted for gold patiently for 150 years with so little success that the name became a Caribbean joke. However, the Banana ship-pers came along about thirty years ago and have made more money since that time than the Spaniards made out of the land in three centuries. If the Spaniards had used more hoes and less picks in their labors in the new world, Spain might to-day be congested with millionaires.

Costa Rica is a small country, about as large as Vermont and New Hampshire and even more bumpy in surface. It is equipped with three climates torrid, temperate, and cold. On the seacoast, rain falls by feet instead of inches and anything more than a coat of tan is uncomfortable. Half way up the mountains people brag like Michiganians about sleeping under blankets at night, while on the summits of the 11,000 foot mountains the children and frosted are not uncommon. Much of Costa Rica's soil has been blown out of its volcanoes and in this soil, fine coffee and some very frangible and feverish patriots are raised.

The chief business of Costa Rica is to furnish bananas for the United States and Europe. Its next most strenuous occupation is getting extensions on its public debt. Costa Rica has borrowed most successfully from England and has refrained from paying interest on its debts with almost equal success.

Costa Rica holds the world's championship for seceding. South Carolina not excepted. In 1821 it seceded from Spain after a hard fight. Two years later it seceded from Mexico and in 1848 it took its doll things and went away from the United States of Central America. Later on it retired from the Greater Republic of Central America. However, Costa Rica has always governed itself with great success having had no revolutions worth mentioning. It has about 400,000 people and a gunboat large enough to furnish sleeping accommodations for its admiral.

The capital of Costa Rica is San Jose, which can be reached by railroad if the traveler is in no hurry or by mule track if he is pressed for time.

THE RIGHT HOUSE

The Grover.

The grocer sells the things we eat—all sorts of things, in reason; the pickle, sour and honey sweet, and garden sass in season. He sends things where his patron dwells and strange it seems to many he doesn't eat the goods he sells, to gain an honest penny. He has his window filled with fruits that came from distant regions, from countries where the warthogs roots, and jaguars roam in legions. The treasures of some far-off clime—no royal store could beat them! And still I wonder, all the time, just why he doesn't eat them. With dates from Arab, the blest, and figs from Asia Minor, the smiling grocer does his best to please the western diner. Imported things upon his shelf, spaghetti, cheese and noodle; if I were he, I would, myself, consume the whole caboodle! The grocer reaches south and north and east and west he reaches.

es, for all the eatables of worth, the canteloupes and peaches; the new potatoes and the peas, the condiments and sauces, the Chinese eggs and switzer cheese, which oft are temptations. I'd hate to sell such tempting things; if patrons came, "I'd greet them, and say, "They're not for sale, by jings, for I intend to eat them!"

Grand Falls

Welcomes H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught.

Saturday, July 11th, was observed as a general holiday in Grand Falls in honor of the visit of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught.

The beautiful weather that had prevailed for ten days previously still continued, and no more ideal day could be imagined.

The great influx of visitors, put accommodation at a premium, and added quite perceptibly to the resident population, and all alike turned out in the true "old-fashioned" holiday spirit to do honor to the royal visit or expected in the afternoon.

On all sides could be seen great displays of bunting; scarcely a house but boasted flags of all kinds, and the constantly passing groups, plentifully sprinkled with bright hued costumes of the ladies, flags gaily streaming and flapping in the breeze, all against a background of blue sky and fresh green trees, formed a scene that would not soon be forgotten, and certainly was a becoming signification of the loyalty and welcome that awaited the Duke.

The L.O.A. held in the forenoon a monster parade, the ranks of which were considerably swelled by brethren from the surrounding villages. The Salvation Army band was in attendance and lentened their progress with very appropriate selections, adding not a little to the effect and success of the affair.

A very interesting cricket match was played at 10 a.m., at which a large number of spectators were present. In the early afternoon there was a baseball match between married and single, which drew a much larger crowd and was thoroughly enjoyed. Both players and spectators carried on lively bits of chaff, and often "gems of repartee" delighted the "non-combatants," all given and taken in the utmost good humor and increasing immensely the success of the evening.

At four o'clock, standard time, the big mill whistle announced the approach of the royal train, and the entire population repaired to the Passenger Storage Building, in front of which a platform had been erected. Here in a square enclosure, which was magnificently bedecked with the standards of all nations, in the centre practically of Grand Falls, with the Mills to the west and the town to the east, the young and the old awaited the arrival. Heartiest cheering greeted the appearance of the train around the curve, and when His Royal Highness appeared on the platform the solemn and beautiful strains of the National Anthem accompanied by the G. F. band arose from the assembled throng. H.R.H. the Duke, then thanked the people for their enthusiastic welcome, and for the splendid decorations, and proceeded by train to the Grand Falls House, Lord Northcliffe's residence, where a reception was held, at which about one hundred and twenty people were present.

At a dinner later on in the evening there were H.R.H. the Duke, H. E. the Governor and Lady Davidson, the Lord Bishop of Newfoundland, Hon. E. T. McGrath, Mr. and Mrs. Jones and Dr. and Mrs. Chamberlain.

On the athletic grounds a football match was arranged between Botwood and Grand Falls, which drew a record crowd. The visiting team acquitted themselves very creditably, but went down to defeat after a very interesting game.

When darkness began to descend, the electrical decorations were lighted. At the entrance to the G. F. House an arch had been erected and very tastefully decorated with many colored lights; it was very effective in its pretty surroundings.

On one of the piers in the river could be seen a huge display of colored electric lamps, representing two ensigns crossed, surmounting the word "Welcome" erected in red and yellow lights alternately. This was a most delightful sight. Every detail was thrown back from the surface of the river as from a mirror, and the various lights on the Boom and piers still further enhanced the brilliant spectacle, making it one of fascinating beauty. Then, nearly half a mile away, and about two hundred feet from the ground, hung on the Acid Tower a large "A" fifty feet long surmounted by a coronet formed of red and yellow lights.

The brilliance of the design made the surrounding darkness seem deeper and completely obscured the supports, so that the scheme of decoration looked as if it were suspended from the skies. H.R.H. was particularly pleased with this thing, and remarked that it was the first time he had seen the combination of his initial and the coronet displayed to such great effect.

Sunday morning, the Royal guest and party attended Divine Service in the Church of England here, at which the sermon was delivered by His Lordship Bishop Jones.

At five o'clock the train departed for Botwood, and brought to an end what was, according to his own statement, one of the most interesting episodes of H.R.H.'s present tour. His admiration was excited by the ideal site of the mills and the town, the healthy and beautiful environment, the practical and well designed town with its comfortable dwellings, and every modern accessory to comfort and happiness. He commented on the happy appearance of the community and the general air of prosperity everywhere so apparent, and the wholesome enthusiasm that imbued their life.

There is no doubt that his visit to Grand Falls was to him a revelation of what can be accomplished in a few short years in what was formerly a wilderness; the excellence of the organized plan on which things are worked, and the great progress that had been made in such a short space of time was a source of astonishment which he graciously returned as a compliment.

He was particularly impressed with the evident sincerity of the welcome accorded, and the manifestations of delight and loyalty on the part of all, and we hope will bring with him pleasant memories of his short visit to Grand Falls, the pioneer town of the Interior.—O.P.
