articles on Bolshevism there is and, but in the labyrinth of con- jectures and reports with which he is confronted the impartial frequently finds it hard to pick apart the truth. It is for him to see up before his eyes even the picture of Bolshevism as a philosophy, he is completely puzzled when he attempts to form a estimate of the character and per- sonality of the man who is its creator and chief exponent.

truth of the matter is that Len- in by no means an easy man to know. For years he has enveloped himself in a veil of mystery—a policy housekeeper than a bungalow owner as an apron.

Chops served in a silver dish will keep hot much longer than served on a platter.

A cement for glass is one of the latest inventions in the world.

REST TIME.

Glad I'm living nowadays,
With the world with sun and rain,
Glad the lord has favored me
Once again to live to see
Tillips nodding at my feet
And to smell the clover sweet;
Glad that I can hear the birds
Singing, without need of words,
Songs of joy on every hand
That the soul can understand.

Yesterday a robin hopped
To my window sill and stopped
And beside the crystal pane
Started up a glad refrain;
Poured out all his melody
For the whole wide world and me,
Sang his gladdest repertoire,
Paused for breath and sang no more.

And I stood and heard him sing
And I thanked him for it, too.

Now the daisies are awake,
And the buds begin to break;
Now the ivy starts to creep
And the roses from their sleep
Sir themselves, and likewise I
Stretch beneath the patch of moss
And go forth to find once more
Life as radiant as before;
Out with birds and shrubs and trees
I can live my reveries.

Winter hedged me in with care,
Kept me from the pathways fair,
Wore me down with burdens grim,
Like the elm tree's branch and trim,
Meekling every wind that blows
I was naked to my woes.
Now the robins sing once more,
I can wander from my door,
And with all earth's loveliest
Find a day of perfect rest.

there is something in those steady grey eyes that arrests the attention, something in that quizzing, half-contemptuous, half-smiling look which speaks of boundless self-confidence and conscious superiority. His knowledge of languages is above the average. He is a proficient German scholar, while he writes and speaks English with tolerable accuracy. He is certainly by far the greatest intellectual force which the Russian Revolution has yet brought to light.

It is not, however, to his intellectual powers that he owes his predominant position inside his own party. The almost fanatical respect with which he is regarded by the men who are his colleagues, and who are at least as jealous of each other as politicians in other countries, is due to other qualities than mere intellectual capacity. Chief of these are his iron courage, his grim, relentless determination, and his complete lack of self-interest. In his creed of world-revolution he is as unscrupulous and as uncompromising as a Jesuit, and in his code of political ethics the end to be attained is a justification for the employment of any weapon. To him capital is the Fiend incarnate, and with such an enemy he neither gives nor asks for mercy.

A Frank Statement.

Yet as an individual he is not without certain virtues. In the many attacks, both justified and unjustified, which have been made against him, no breath of scandal has ever touched his private life. He is married—according to all accounts singularly happily married—and, in a country where corruption has now reached its apogee, he stands out head and shoulders above all his colleagues as the one man who is above suspicion. To Lenin the stories of Bolshevik orgies and carousals have no relation. His own worldly needs are more than frugal, and his personal budget is probably the most modest of all the Bolshevik Commissaries. Dishonest, treacherous, guilty of the worst forms of secret diplomacy as the Bolsheviks have been in all their public dealings, on which he has consented to see a foreign journalist or a foreign official, has always been extraordinarily frank. "Personally, I have nothing against you. Politically, however, you are my enemy, and I must use every weapon I think fit for your destruction. Your Government does the same against me." The individual is only a pawn in the game, and no individual, however dear, however close he may be to Lenin's heart, will ever be allowed to stand in his way. His cruelty, however, is not a question of personal vengeance. Where Trotsky and other Bolsheviks have pursued their enemies with a bitter, personal hatred, Lenin in certain cases, where the individual has been of little account, has even been guilty of acts of clemency. But where Trotsky might shrink through fear of the consequences from shooting 10,000 men in cold blood, Lenin, although he is not one of the chief advocates of the terror, would assuredly not hesitate if he thought such an action were essential to the advancement of his cause.

Question and Answer.

No one who has ever been present at a Bolshevik Congress can have any doubts as to the real driving power behind the Bolshevik movement. In the numerous political crises through which the Bolsheviks have passed during their 18 months' tenure of the Russian political stage, Lenin's has been the master mind which time and again has averted the almost inevitable disaster and restored the fallen fortunes of a party that had temporarily lost both its head and its heart. In debate he is an unrivaled dialectician, facing his opponents with an unruffled temper which is provokingly irritating in its serenity. Politicians of many years' experience might well be puzzled by the madly incongruous, peculiarly Russian questions which are put by ignorant delegates at every Bolshevik Congress. Lenin, however, is never at a loss. He is as sure of himself as a schoolmaster with a class of small boys. A delegate asks an impossible question about the Brest Peace and the doctrine of self-determination. Like a flash comes the reply:—"One foolish man can ask more questions in a minute than 10 wise men can answer in a day." And, like schoolboys at a conjuring entertainment, the assembly claps its hands and grins with childish delight.

Of course he is a demagogue; has made use of all the demagogue's arts. But behind all the inconsistencies of his policy, the tactics, the manoeuvring, there lies a deep-rooted plan which he has been turning over in his mind for years and which he now thinks is ripe for execution. Demagogues have no constructive programme. Lenin, at least, knows exactly what he wishes to achieve and how he means to achieve it. When other politicians try to adapt their programme to the needs and desires of society, Lenin is attempting to fit society to the narrow frames of his rigid, Prussianlike programme. A fanatic if you like, but a fanatic who has already made history and who has more genius than most fanatics. Cold, pitiless, devoid of all sentiment, utterly ruthless in his effort to force the narrow tenets of his Marxist dogma upon the whole world, Lenin is not a lovable character. He is, however, the one Bolshevik of whom non-Bolshevik Russians can ever be brought, albeit grudgingly, to speak with respect.

We Shall Remember Them.

They sleep beneath no immemorial
Their resting-place no temple arch
No blazoned shaft or graven tablet
Men's praise—and yet we shall remember them.

The unforgetting clouds shall drop
their tears;
The winds in ceaseless lamentation
shall wail;
For Gods white Knights are lying on
their biers,
Who pledged their service to restore the Grail.

For them the task is done, the strife
is stilled;
No more shall care disturb, nor zeal
condemn;
And when the larger good has been
fulfilled,
In coming years we shall remember
them.

What need have they for holy sepulture?
Within the hearts of men is hallow-
ed ground—
A sanctuary where they rest secure,
And with Love's immortality are crowned.

And far-off voices of the future sing—
"They shall remain in memory's Diadem."
And winds of promise still are whispering
That same refrain, "We shall remember them."

Ways and Means.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—As there is considerable discussion as to the way the cost of upkeep of the proposed Maternity Hospital may be met, may I take up some of the space in your valuable paper and relate what was done in my home town under similar circumstances. There, as here, there were continual calls upon the same individuals every year of the maintenance of Hospitals and similar institutions. It was believed that many of those for whose welfare they supported them in a tangible manner, if permitted. A number of gentlemen met to consider ways and means of obtaining the necessary funds to carry on and develop the good work being done by the various institutions. They decided to try to interest, not only the wealthy merchant and manufacturer, but the Clergy of every denomination, and every working-man and woman. Deputations were appointed to wait upon the Clergy, every storekeeper and all employers of labor.

The Clergy were asked to devote a Sunday in October to special services and sermons in aid of the Hospitals and all collections to be devoted to the fund. In almost every case the Churches fell into line and this particular Sunday became known as "Hospital Sunday." There followed quite a friendly rivalry as to which of the Churches should head the list. The Oratory, of which Father or Cardinal Newman was in charge, The Synagogue, The Unitarian Church of
