While it is well known that Aspirin means Bayer manufacture, to assist the public against imitations, the Tablets of Bayer Company will be stamped with their general trade mark, the "Bayer Cross."

CHAPTER XIII.

So, as the poor old doctor went from the daughter's room to the father he told the sad news to Mrs. Williams, who with tears and lamentations as quickly communicated it to the household.

Before night it was well known that Lilian, only daughter of Sir Ralph Melville, baronet, of Riverhall, Berkshire, was lying ready for the family vault.

The great bell of the chapel tolled, the many loving hearts who had looked upon the fair girl as one of Heaven's angels on earth were weeping round the desolated hall; the Towers were in confusion, and its master in a frenzy of sorrow and passion, when another blow, stricken by the same dread hand, fell upon the village.

Never parted in like they were not severed in death. The lord and master of Riverhall had gone to join his darling at the river's brink.

Sir Ralph Melville was dead. He had died, said Dr. Bromwell, as peacefully as she; died without pain, without consciousness, passed like her from the sleep of life into the sleep of death.

Great was the lamentation, great also was the confusion. The terrible death-dealing fever was about still; all present were paralyzed.

The house was a plague house, and the doctors would not allow anyone to approach it. The very servants were dismissed, sent away to safety, and the huge place given up to the charge of the doctors and Miss Lucas.

No one was to enter it until it had been thoroughly disinfected; and Mr. Packer, arriving post haste, was denied admittance.

"But," said he, "the papers, Dr. Bromwell, and the will. They must all be secured. I—I must see that things are perfectly set in order."

"You must enter at your own peril and risk," said the doctor, gravely. "I will risk it," said the grim lawyer, and he entered, sealed the papers, and took charge of the keys.

"Now," said he, "I should like to see poor Sir Ralph and Miss Lilian."

"Impossible," said Dr. Bromwell. "I would not be answerable for the consequences; they might be fatal."

But the lawyer was as resolute in this as in the other, and the doctor admitted him to the room in which the two bodies were lying.

Miss Lucas followed him in and removed the cloth from the faces.

The faithful old lawyer turned away with a great sob.

"Thank you," he said; "I am much obliged. To think that I should live to see them lying there. Poor, dear child!"

Dr. Bromwell awaited him in the dining room.

"Sir," he said, "you are running a great risk."

Mr. Packer waved his hand. "When does the funeral take place?" he asked, brokenly.

"That is the question I was going to ask you," said the doctor. "Or, rather, how soon can it take place? They must be within the vaults before to-morrow night."

"What!" exclaimed the lawyer.

The doctor nodded gravely. "It is said," he said, "veiling his piercing eyes with his long, lithe hand. 'But on this most fearful epidemic most stringent measures are compulsory. They must be buried to-morrow, sir.'"

"But—but—the coffin—the arrangements," said the lawyer.

"Are all made, at least for the funeral. For the rest I have no concern. Sir, I presume the heir will be advised that it is dangerous to rush to the house for some weeks to come?"

Mr. Packer nodded. "There is no heir," he said, sadly, at least, no successor to the title. It's extinct. Lady Melville, Sir Ralph's brother's widow, takes the estate."

"And may I ask where she is at present?" asked Dr. Bromwell.

"I really do not know," replied Mr. Packer. "I can learn from her solicitors, however; in fact, I must do so at once."

"Just so," said the doctor, who had never removed his eyes from his face and seemed taking his mental measurement; "but I beg of you to impress upon them the importance of communicating to her ladyship the danger she would run in coming here till the place is disinfected."

"I will do so," said the lawyer, putting on his gloves. "And what steps are you going to take as regards the funeral?"

"You will follow, I suppose, sir?" said the doctor, "and undertake the proper conduct of the affair? When I have removed the infected linen, furniture, etc., from the sick room, my task is done."

"Yes," said Mr. Packer, taking out his memorandum book. "What steps shall you take?"

"I shall have a cart and men in attendance to-morrow night as soon as the coffins are muffled down, and remove the articles I think may have any taint upon them, and that no precaution may be omitted I shall superintend it myself."

Mr. Packer nodded, drank the small liqueur glass of brandy which the doctor had thought fit to pour out for him, and shook hands.

"Leave it to Lady Melville, sir," he said, "all fitting acknowledgment for your services. She owes you much for the devotion you have shown, and still show, to poor Sir Ralph and his dear child. Good-day, sir; good-day." And the old lawyer returned to town post haste, as he had come, while Dr. Bromwell from the huge window watched him depart, and then sought Miss Lucas.

"Kata," he said, "one more obstacle overcome. There goes another dupe foisted to the top of his bent. To-morrow night and the game is ours."

CHAPTER XIV.

With an indifference that was perfectly sublime Clarence Clifford lay back in the close carriage and allowed himself to be driven away.

His two captors, French to the very eyelids, sat opposite to him, grim and silent.

He looked at them with listless curiosity, listless partly through weakness, but principally through a not unnatural disinclination to meddle with the affair fate had so arranged for him.

Without a question he alighted and walked between his escort up the staircase of a house in a narrow, ill-favored street. Also without a question he entered a small, meanly furnished room, and sank upon the only couch in it.

His guards, after glancing significantly at the window, which was crossed with thick iron bars, and just touching the heavy bolts on the outside of the door, grimly nodded at each other and retired.

The prisoner waited and fell asleep. When he awoke a fire was burning in the stove and food was upon the table.

With a sigh he arose, warmed himself, looked at the food, and returned to the sofa.

When he awoke again the food had been removed, but a black bottle and a glass had taken its place. He felt refreshed after the two naps, and a little less weak, and uncorked the bottle.

Its contents proved to be port, and, moreover, old, and in good condition.

This puzzled him, and for the first time set him thinking.

He looked round the room. Meanly as it was furnished the appointments were not those of a police cell.

"Political prisoners, even, do not get old port wine," he mused. "Where am I, and on what charge have I been arrested?"

Stirred up to a slight interest, he crawled to the window and looked out.

The view was simple and not extensive. There was a blank wall that served to hedge in an equally blank yard. The wall was of good height and surmounted by sharp iron spikes.

"It looks like a prison outside," he murmured; "but this—well, they will be here directly, and I shall know. After all, what does it matter?"

With a sigh he returned to the couch, tried to think, to gather up the tangled skein of the past; but, fortunately for the life which was battling within him against the weakness that still held its citadel, fell asleep.

The room was quite dark when he awoke, the table obscured the fire until he rose upon his elbow.

For a few minutes he failed to grasp his identity and the situation, but when he did so he got up, walked to the door and knocked.

This summons was answered immediately by the heavy withdrawal of the huge bolts, and, a moment after, one of his captors entered bearing a light.

This he set on the table, and, turning toward the prisoner, asked him if he had any wine.

"No," said Clarence Clifford, in French.

"Then monsieur had better drink some," said the jailer, and, with grim nonchalance, poured out a glass.

Clarence Clifford looked at him keenly.

"What prison is this?" he asked; "and when will the charge be made?"

The man stroked his beard, let his eyes wander round the room, came back to the wine bottle as a last resource, and said, with obstinate politeness:

"Monsieur had better partake of the wine; it was ordered for monsieur, and is good for monsieur. Allons! monsieur is weak; wine is to make monsieur strong, therefore."

And, with a significant wave of the hand, the man left the sentence unfinished. Clarence Clifford sank into a chair and pressed his head to his brow.

MISERABLE AND ALWAYS IN PAIN

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a Dependable Help to Mothers

Port Greville, N. S.—"I took your medicine for a terrible pain in my side and for weakness and headaches. I seemed to blast all over, too, and my feet and hands were the worst. I am the mother of four children and I am nursing my baby—the first one of four I could nurse. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before the baby's birth, so you can see how much it helped me. I cannot praise it too highly for what it has done for me. I took all kinds of medicine, but the Vegetable Compound is the only one that has helped me for any length of time. I recommend it to any one with troubles like mine and you may use my letter for a testimonial." Mrs. ROBERT McCULLY, Port Greville, Nova Scotia.

Before and after childbirth the mother will find Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a blessing. Many, many letters are received giving the same sort of experience as is given in this letter. Not only is the mother benefited, but these good results pass on to the child.

No harmful drugs are used in the preparation of this medicine—just roots and herbs—and it can be taken in safety by the nursing mother. 98 out of every 100 women reported benefit from its use in a recent canvass among women users of this medicine.

Health in Strawberries

FRUIT THAT KEEPS US FIT.

The other day a doctor stated that if strawberries could be grown all the year round, and became a staple article of diet as potatoes, his profession would be ruined!

Strawberries are something more than a luscious fruit; they are a valuable medicine. In a strawberry are lime, phosphates, alkaline and mineral salts, iron, manganese, and a special kind of sugar, constituents that are so well proportioned that they do their full share of good.

Diseases particularly susceptible to the strawberry cure are rheumatism and gout. That's because of the salicylic salts in the fruit. On the Continent doctors have established special hospitals, set amidst miles of strawberry beds, for the cure of the most acute form of rheumatism. Anaemia also yields to the strawberry treatment.

Field to Jam Jar. Some people find that strawberries upset them, and that they cause an irritating rash. In such cases strawberries should be left alone. The trouble is caused by the body being intensely antagonistic to the salicylic salts.

Finally, the sugar in strawberries is so energizing that if the red berries contained nothing else they would still rank high as a medicinal food. Strawberry plants grow in rows like potatoes. They are allowed to remain for three or four seasons, after which fresh plants are set in their places.

When required for the fruit markets, strawberries are picked "on stalk" and packed in baskets. Those required for jam factories are "plugged," the hard, inner core being removed with the stalk. The fruit so prepared is put into half-hundredweight tubs.

The ideal kind for jam-making is known as the Stirling Castle. It is a small strawberry of excellent flavour, is readily "plugged," and when converted into jam retains its brilliant scarlet colour.

Industry and Trade

Glasgow Herald: Our country is essentially an industrial area, and however much we may be able to augment our income by services to other nations our ultimate prosperity depends wholly on the cultivation and development of the resources which lie to our hands. If we are, as we seem to be, squaring our trade balance by services as intermediaries to other countries, this has only been made possible by a far-reaching financial organization built up in the past on the foundation of solid trade and industry, but if in the evolution of commerce we find ourselves without the backing of trade and industry the subsidiary sources of invisible income will wither and fall. We have perhaps much to be thankful for that in the period of transition through which we are passing we have had these extraneous sources of income to draw upon, but the knowledge that they are there should not be allowed to obscure the primary consideration of declining industry.
