If out of sight "is out of mind" in your case, you had better give him up, but hink you had better give him up, but hink well over it. Many men here are think she did. But about a week ago when I asked if I might escort her to a dance I found to my dismay that she had made arrangements to go with another fellow. How may I again with her love, as I will never be astisfied with another girl, or if she never really loved me I fear that I will never be astisfied with another girl. Or if she never really loved me I fear that I will never be astisfied with another girl. Or if she never really loved me I fear that I will never be astisfied with another girl. Dear Miss Libby: I have read your very good advice to perplexed ones, and I now come to you in my trouble. I have been keeping company with a young man down east for the past two years, and he has many times told me that he loved me, and when I am in his company I seem to return his love. Now, I have come out here (west) and he often writes to me now, and still says, he loves me. Sometimes I think in the I really love him and could love no one else, and sometimes I don't know whether I love him or not? I don't want to encourage him if I don't want to keep company with him. Your early answer will be greatly appreciated.
