Do not let me detain you a moment longer, Mr—Keith, for you wet condition is a sad reproach to me." the people had been passing rapidly off the boat, and the three were now almost alone, so there were very few, if any, to observe the curious tableau.

Kenneth was sure that he had never seen the lady before; he did not even know her name; and yet there was in that almost petrified glance of abhorrence which she bent upon him an expression which betrayed that she had discovered something both familiar and repulsive

Perhaps she was annoyed and angry because of the caress which he had given and received from her little niece, he thought at first; but surely she could not be so unreasonable to suppose that he had been actuated by any save the purest of metives in acceding to that childish est. e felt very awkward for a moment,

"I beg your pardon, sir," she said with polished courtesy; "I hope you will ex-cuse my apparent rudeness, but, as you turned just them, there was—something in your face and bearing which reminded hame, that I may know whom I have been so fortunate to serve today?"

"Isabelle Kavanagh Langford," the child replied, "that auntle always calls me Belle. swayed dizzily where she stood, and, throwing out one hand, she clutched wildly at an iron post for support. Kenneth sprang forward, thinking she was about to fall in a swoon.

"I fear the excitement of this accident has been too much for you, madam," he said, with kindly concern. "Let me lead you to a seat."

'No, no! Do not touch me!" she cried. with a gasp and a gesture of repulsion. Then she added, in a quieter tone, while she struggled for composure: "Excuse me; I-I shall be better soon. Ah, yes; the excitement has been more than I could

"Why, Auntie Kate! What can be the matter with you?" the young girl demanded, in a tone of wonder.

"Oh, my darling!—mine!—mine! Yeu are mine, and no one shall ever rob me of you!" she murmured, incoherently, and evidently losing her composure again. evidently losing her composure again.

Kenneth moved quietly away a few steps, and left the two together. He could not understand either her strange words or this excessive emotion, which seemed to unnerve her even more than their great peril of her niece had done. He tried to believe that the shock and the intense strain upon her nerves had been the cause of this sudden break-ing down, and yet he could not reconcile her peculiar treatment of himself with

"What can you mean, auntie? Nobody wants to rob you of me, I am sure," re-turned Miss Belle, regarding her with surprise. "I do not think you are treating the kind gentleman nice at all," she continued, reproachfully. "What would have become of me but for him?"

The woman lifted her head and kissed the child passionately, while for a mo-ment she searched her face anxiously. Then, apparently somewhat calmed and she arose and moved grace-illy to Kenneth's side.

"Forgive me, Mr. Keith," she said, but without meeting his eye, "I am sure you must think very bady of me for my apparent lack of appreciation of what you have done; but, truly, I am very grateful to you. I cannot express half what I feel. I believe it would have killed me if my darling had been drowned. Wonderly Again Riding at the Washington Races.

LONDON IN FINALS. Toronto, Nov. 17 .- The O. R. F. U. executive met tonight with President Ballantyne in the chair. The other members present were George S. Gibbons, F. Thompson, A. W. McPherson, George Ballard and Secretary Frank D. Woodworth.

The intermediate series, on motion, was again taken up, starting from Morrison's expulsion in the London-Toronto protest. The executive decided that the Argonauts were not entitled to compete again, and the fol-lowing schedule was drawn up:

Terento at London, Nov. 22; London to pay Toronto $50. Final winner at Peterboro, Nov. 29;

Peterboro to pay $50. When the representatives of the Toronto club were informed of this decision after the meeting they declared their intention of defaulting. The London club will be ordered to play in Peterboro next Saturday, and will receive $50 on their expenses. Word was sent to this effect to Capt. Crawford.

In the junior semi-finals, the Wellesleys are ordered to play Limestones at Kingston next Saturday, the latter to guarantee $50, and Hamilton goes to Galt without guarantee. It is not expected that Torontos will fill their engagement.
