TRAVELERS' FRIEND ASSISTS THOUSANDS

Mrs. Parker Gives Up Intensely Human Work To Enter Business.

"Have you ever helped to nip an eel in the bud?" was a question asked Wednesday afternoon of a sweet-faced, capable-looking young woman, in a business-like, dark tweed suit and sailor hat, the Y. W. C. A. travelers' aid badge conspicuous on her coat.

"If we did, that is one of the things we would never tell about," answered Mrs. Leila Parker, who has resigned her position with the local association to accept a business position after two and a half years of service.

Her smile robbed the reply of any severity, and she hastened to explain. "You see, when people attempt to elope they are usually very young and likely to be really after it, the better, and I think this applies to a good deal of our travelers' aid work. It should speak for itself in the service it gives to strangers, inexperienced, sick, sorrowing."

Sunshine and storm, Mrs. Parker has been faithfully at her post, now at one station, now at another, the first secretary in the history of the work in London to stay down for the late trains in the evening.

How many has she assisted in two and a half years?

Referring to her book of records, easily accessible, she discovered that with Miss Anderson, in six months of her first year, service had been extended to 6,160 travelers. "Probably," she said, "I looked after half or 8,230 of these, and this does not represent the total number by any means. The figure one, standing for a mother, frequently includes a number of children as well. I do not believe it would be too much to claim that each traveler's aid secretary gives at least some small assistance to between eight and ten thousand people in a year, and that in two and a half years I have greeted or been greeted by twenty thousand or more human 'ships'."

"Many have been just as ships that pass in the night to be lost sight of very quickly. Others have returned to the city again and again, always showing a friendly attitude towards the travelers' aid and good memory for help given. Sometimes, in a very unusual case, a letter has come back expressing appreciation, or telling what happened after."

"As a Y. W. C. A. worker, my first duty has been to the young girls and young women traveling alone and in need of information, advice or other help. The day's work brings to us mothers, traveling with small children; elderly people, who perhaps are a bit timid; crippled, blind, deaf, sick people, on their way to and from hospital; worried people, sorrowing people, and sometimes very happy people."

"While the work is sometimes strenuous and causes anxious moments, it has its compensations. It is such very human work, bringing one so vitally in touch with real people, that I have always enjoyed it and found it satisfying. Again, the way has been made easier through the courtesy and co-operation of officials and associates."

Thursday will be Mrs. Parker's last day on duty as travelers' aid secretary and already Miss Muriel Elliott of 523 English street has been coaching for several days in order to fill the position temporarily. No permanent appointment will be made until the September meeting of the Y. W. C. A. board, the first after the holiday season.
