To THE WORLD : I have read the letter of Orangeman in your issue to day with great pleasure, and am right glad that our brethern are not going to be led by the nose by political schemers whose chief aim in our ranks is to make a living out of their connection with the order. There was a time when traitors such as these could throw dust into our eyes, but happily those so entirely indifferent to the interests of the days are gone. They can no longer take the demoralizing shilling of bribery and corruption and sell their brethern with impunity to the highest bidder. The province. They had had wars, many millions province. They had had wars, many millions of money spentand thousands of lives lost in struggles in regard to territory, bearing the same proportion as that which is now at take in this matter. The policy of Sir John and his government in this matter is not a late thought. It is an old doctrine taken up ten years ago, and persistently followed ever since. Ten years ago when all the rights of the Hud-son bay company had been surrendered to impunity to the highest bidder. The finger of scorn and contempt shall meet them at every corner of the street, and the only salute that tingles in thier ears is: "There goes an orange traitor and a guilty constinue."
