H. Allen & Co., New York, to John J. Dixon & Co.: So far as outward conditions are concerned the situation bears a more promising aspect, but if they indicate recovery from stagnation, which has prevailed for many weeks past, the process must needs be slow. The alteration in the rate of exchange which followed the loss of gold at the English capital will do much to stay the importations of that coin and to restore normal conditions abroad. Our own banks have more than they need and the importations will in future weeks greatly exceed the drains upon them. No concern therefore is felt as to the financial situation here, all the anxiety felt has had reference to the foreign market, which reflected its shadows over here, and the influence which will result from the action of the English
