The Novascotion replies,—
First,—We consider a Responsible Government to mesh, a government accountable to the people whose business it presides over, as NEV distinguished from a government having no accountability, except some very vague thing of the kind, connected with an office at the other side of the Atlantic — Secondly,—the power of the Representative body, and of its constituents, seems to us to be enhansed in the following manner: Instead of working in ignorance of the acts or designs or government, as if—which appears to be the wish of ment, as if—which appears to be the wish of ment, as if—which appears to be the wish of the Representative and the Executive branches were hostile powers, the Assembly branches were hostile powers, the Assembly, now has immediate information, from members of its own body, who are known to pos-sess the requisite knowledge, and bound to impart it. These men, the avowed advocates of the government, pledged to retire if they cannot approve of the acts of the Executive, are subject, as the representatives of that government, to the perpetual controul, and inestigation, and censure or support, of the deliberative body to which they belong; this For Terms apply to must be very influential on any set of men.— They have stated their tenure of office to depend on the well understood and well exprespend on the well understood and well as seed wishes of the people, and are therefore bound to retire when the representatives of STOLEN from the Barque Plutus while lying at Aymar's Wharf on the night of the 11th inst. a bound to reture when the representatives of the people pronounce a deliberate and solemn "want of confidence" in the body. The position of a portion of the Administration, as responsible for the acts of the Executive, and as members of the Assembly, brings them before the public at stated periods, to give account of their stewardship, and to receive upproval or disapproval: thus the people, immediately, have a voice in the selection of the Council; and the people's House have a voice on the continuance in office of the members of that body.

STOLEN from the Barque Platus while lying at Aymar's Whart on the night of the 1th inst. a Gig Boat, about 18 feet keel, Liverpool build, lep work, painted green bottom, black top, with a red streak of green inside, Platus on the stern outside. Any person who will return said boat or give information where she can be 'had, will be handsomely rewarded.
