OFFICIAL WRONG-DOING.

It will be remembered by many of our readers that some three or four years ago, our County affairs, financially and otherwise, were in a disgraceful, confused and deplorable condition. There were glaring discrepancies in the accounts and other official improprieties, which a committee was appointed to investigate; and that committee traced the delinquencies complained of to Mr. Grassie, who was then Clerk of the Peace. His conduct and obnoxious mal-practices in his office were so outrageous that the Court of Sessions took prompt and effectual steps for his immediate removal from office. It was then hoped and believed that having got rid of him as a County official, there would be nothing serious to again complain in the matters referred to. But he still held the office of Prothonotary—an office over which the Court of Sessions has no direct control. Nevertheless, he was in a position to operate detrimentally on the interests of the County.

As Prothonotary, in the drawing of juries, it was found that he acted unfairly and grossly illegal. The Grand Jury every year, was so constituted that business was clogged, and the affairs of the County suffered in consequence. The unfair and illegal manner of drawing the Grand Jury was so notorious that it became necessary to legalize it by an annual Act of the Legislature. Besides, it is the duty of the Prothonotary to pay into the hands of the County Treasurer the whole amount of Jurors' fees paid into the Supreme Court whenever a delinquency case is being tried. Within three or four years, there were nearly one thousand dollars, drawn from the County Treasury for Jurors' fees, and less than one hundred dollars paid into it by the Prothonotary.

When the Sessions opened the other day, as we intimated in our last, it was seen by every body in Court that the Grand Jury had been illegally drawn; and it was asserted by some of the Justices on the Bench that for many years the Prothonotary, in utter disregard of law and fair play, had invariably packed Grand Juries to suit himself—and that he had, in some instances, told individuals months before the drawing that he intended to put their names foremost on the list. A committee was forthwith appointed to inquire into, and report upon, the charges preferred against the Prothonotary; and the result was, a Report confirming all the allegations of the wrong doings and illegal practices of the official functionary in question. This Report was followed by resolutions passed by the Sessions—we believe unanimously—and an earnest Petition to the Government for his removal from office. The Petition, if presented to all the rate-payers in the County, would probably be signed by nineteen twentieths of them all. It is painful to us to announce the foregoing facts to our readers; but they are already notorious, and our duty as Journalists leaves us no choice in the matter. Mr. Grassie is an old man; but hoary hairs cannot screen from notice, or stifle animadversion upon, such obnoxious official conduct as his is alleged to be.

OUR RECEPTACLE.

Few of our readers are aware of the tax imposed upon our time, to read the correspondence with which we are favored (?) by a multitude of long-winded Seribes, who seem intent upon beautifying literature, and upon upholding the various interests of our busy world. We have a huge drawer that we call our Receptacle, into which we throw all the correspondence of equal value to be more thoroughly read and examined at a future day. A contributor of unquestioned merit, is gratefully appreciated by us, and his manuscript is immediately put into the hands of our compositors; while most of the proffered contributions which we receive, is thrown into our Receptacle. Not a little of our correspondence, however, is so outrageously bad, that we put it as soon as received into the stove.

About once a month—generally at the change of the moon—we devote a day to the contents of our Receptacle. For this work we prefer a rainy day—and we can scarcely tell why. Our preference for cloudy weather while thus employed may be but a whim; but it is so. Perhaps, as such day's toil is always concluded by a bonfire, we think there is less danger of a serious conflagration when the atmosphere is damp. In this disagreeable work, we sometimes imagine that we feel as Hercules felt when he, in mythological days, was cleansing the Augean stable. His process of cleansing was by water—ours is by fire. By the aid of a friction match we often impart a fervor and luminosity to rejected contributions, which they did not receive from their authors.

The other day we thrust our hand into our Receptacle, and drew there a manuscript of several closely written pages of foolscap, headed "Our dear little Roxanna, now a saint in Heaven." It was the memoir of a child, who died suddenly of croup, "aged seven months and fourteen days." The author of this tribute to the departed babe was evidently the bereaved mother. Every incident of its infantile life, with charming minuteness, from the moment when its first cry fell upon the mother's ear till the sexton placed the last sod on its grave. The mother's feelings at the christening—at its first smile—at the first indication of teething—at his last sickness—at his death and burial—are all elaborately detailed with marvellous circumstantiality and pathos. The next contribution is from "A Teacher, holding a first class License." To use his own language, he is "desirous of improving the interests of education in the Province." He thinks that Common Schools are entitled to all the benefits to be derived from grants of Provincial money for educational purposes. He regards Colleges as mere "humbugs"—and "nuisances." The orthography of this champion of learning is somewhat defective, however, and he would hardly stand number one at a spelling-bee. As samples in this respect, he spells thus: "Skool"—"Colidge."—We draw again—and we have "a treatise on the cause and cure of the potato-rot by a scientific and practical farmer." He attributes the potato disease to "planting in the wrong time of the moon." His spelling is no less open to criticism than that of the "Licensed Teacher." Next, we draw "a poem, addressed to the Man in the Moon, by Scraphina." We quote a single stanza:

"Thou Lunar Man-changing ever,
Like earthly men down here,
Who to a pledge or promise never Do faithfully adhere."

The foregoing description of specimens of what is found in our box every month, will afford some idea of the ambition of notices to appear in print. The art of writing well is only acquired by adequate training and a thorough acquaintance with language. Words and matter are essentials to successful literary efforts. Something to say, and to know how to say it, form the requisites of an acceptable newspaper contributor. To such our columns are ever open, and we gratefully acknowledge the benefits we receive from competent Scribes.

AUTUMN EXAMINATION.

The examinations in both departments of the Bridgetown school took place Nov. 1.—The Primary department being examined in the morning, and the Advanced in the afternoon. We were unable to be present at the examination in the morning, and, therefore, cannot speak from observation, nor as fully as we could wish, but learn that it was the best that has been witnessed for many terms, showing a decided advance on the part of the younger branch of the school.

The pupils in the Advanced department were examined in Spelling, Geography, Algebra, Geometry, Arithmetic, Reading, Grammar, and Analysis. Different classes in each of the above branches were examined separately, and in a manner that was eminently calculated to test to the fullest extent the knowledge of the pupils. After the teacher had examined the different classes, an invitation was extended to any one present to question them, which invitation was responded to by a number of teachers from other schools. In Arithmetic, problems of the most important and practical kind were solved with correctness and precision. The Reading also claims our special attention, it being one of the most important branches of education. Selections, many of them requiring the very best training in order that they may be properly rendered, were read by the pupils in a manner rarely, if ever, equaled in our common schools, and which showed careful training on the part of the teacher.

We are unable to speak in detail of every branch on which the school was examined; but may briefly state that it was most thorough and satisfactory, and reflected the highest credit on both teacher and pupils. The school showed a very marked advance from last year, showing it to have been a year of almost unparalleled advancement, and clearly demonstrates the great advantage of retaining the same teacher.

After the close of the examination, the teachers present and trustees spoke in the most flattering terms of what they had said and heard.

One of the Trustees read the report of the Inspector from the school register, which report gave forth no uncertain sound, and every one present was fully convinced the teacher had earned it. There were a large number of persons present to witness the afternoon's exercises, all of whom were pleased and satisfied with the examination, and went away with a higher opinion of the proficiency and advantage of our Academy than they had heretofore entertained.

We cannot let the present opportunity pass by without deprecating the lack of interest on the part of the community, in the Primary department of the school, as was shown by so few attending the examination. This ought not so to be. The teacher of this department had labored to bring it up to a standard that it had never before reached, and these efforts should be appreciated by the parents, for the education of the young child is vastly more important, and attended with infinitely more difficulties, than the education of the larger one.

MURDER WILL OUT—REMOISE AND TERROR OF A MURDERER.

Frank McConchie, who was arrested some time ago on suspicion of being the murderer of little Maggie Bane, was taken from the Jamaica Town Hall to the place where he was committed, says the N. Y. World. The terrible crime committed by him has evidently preyed heavily upon his mind, but he nevertheless obtained his discharge from the Grand Jury. At that time, immediately after his discharge from custody, Detective Payne took him into his wagon and rode with him a considerable distance. Knowing the story he had told in the jury room, Payne questioned him closely and succeeded in involving him in a number of contradictions, and subsequent investigation proved that almost his entire story was false. The shirt with the bloody steve, found behind a bin in a farmer's barn not far from the scene of the murder, which McConchie left it after making a change, was proved an important link in the chain of evidence. His story was that the blood came from a sore on his arm and there was a hole in it which he said was torn while he was working at Mr. P. C. Bartram's place the shirt was returned to him and he threw it into a dirty pail of water used as a goose pond. Payne subsequently worked at the place and called the garment out of the mud and dirt, took it home and subjected it to a careful examination by means of a powerful magnifying glass. His investigation convinced him that the sleeve was made by a clean cut, as though with a sharp knife, and besides that the blood stains were all on the outside, proving conclusively they could not have been caused by any injury or sore on the arm. When McConchie was subjected to a private examination at the Jamaica Town Hall on Monday last, he being then arrested on the previous Saturday, he betrayed such evident nervousness that the suspicion against him was greatly strengthened. He repeatedly exclaimed in a tremulous manner when closely questioned, "Oh, I'm honest, I'm honest, I never harmed anybody!" And once or twice, "What do you want to break my neck for?" On Tuesday, when Payne took him to Foster's Meadow, after he had pointed out the spot where the murder was committed, he was taken to the house of Maggie's parents as they entered the house, the grandmother of the murdered child was sharpening a knife. Starting back and trembling in every limb, McConchie cried, "What are you going to do? You're not going to kill me now, are you?" It was here that the dramatic scene between him and Maggie's mother occurred. The mother asked him what Maggie said before he killed her. He said, "She cried mamma." Instantly she sprang upon the trembling wretch and throttled him so savagely that it was with difficulty that Payne could loose her hold. He said, "I was in a corner at the Valley station depot, it was Payne's determination, backed by a revolver, that saved McConchie from death at the hands of the excited crowd which had gathered there.

The prisoner's confession was as follows: On the afternoon of the 14th of August, when the murder was committed, he was in a corner at the Valley station depot, when he saw Kate Hoffman the way through the woods to the Valley Station depot. He saw them both go past the corner, watched Maggie's return, and as she got opposite to him, he sprang out at her and grappled her by the throat to prevent her from making a noise, the poor child meanwhile crying "mamma." After locking Maggie up in a room on her throat, and carried her grasp upon the corn field to the woods, where he attempted to violate her person, and committed her to the woods, where he was waiting for her. He also took her waist-ribbon and tied it tightly around her neck, which completed the work of murder. He afterwards broke down some coter limbs, so that he could find the body after dark, for the purpose of hiding it more effectually, but when darkness came on he was afraid to go near the place.

DEATH FROM STARVATION.
[From the London Echo.]
It is a distressing fact that, in this land of plenty, deaths from starvation occur. What invented story, for instance, can be more surprising and touching than the history and death of Arthur Pease, who was involved at the inquest held by Dr. Hardwick, a few days ago? Aged sixty-five, French formerly held a good position in Dublin, but became reduced in circumstances. His grandfather was a captain in the Duke of Kent's father of her Majesty's uncle being a Colonel Commandant of a regiment of dragoons. He became so poor that he determined to go to London, and about six weeks ago started on the journey, accompanied by his two sons. On reaching Liverpool they could only afford railway fare to Birmingham, and then the journey to London being performed on foot. Much hardship was endured on the road, and after a week's walking they reached town the old man's condition being very weak. They slept in common lodging-houses several nights. French, the elder, growing exhausted and ill, he applied for admission to the Royal Free Hospital, but was not admitted. He next applied for admission to the Holborn Workhouse infirmary, with a like result. He then applied to a doctor, who advised him to go to St. Francis's, but he fell down on the way, and he fell down on the street from exhaustion, and had to be assisted to his destination by one of his sons, where both were readily received. The old man told his melancholy history to the doctor, but was unable to take the food and nourishment offered him. He said he had not had enough to eat for a long time, and for some days had scarcely tasted anything. He gradually sank and died in the course of a few days. A post mortem examination showed that it was a real case of starvation.

SUICIDE BY DYNAMITE.

In the annals of suicide few cases are more remarkable than one which occurred a few days ago at Stidally, in Scotland, where a minor named Duncan deliberately blew himself up with dynamite. It seems that the unfortunate man, who was about fifty years of age, was much distressed at some remarks about him by his neighbors. He was seen coming out of his house with a parcel in his hand, described as being about the size of a two-pound loaf, and to which the whole village, and especially the "strum", or match, the parcel contained dynamite. Having procured a match from the house of a neighbor to whom he remarked that "they had said a great deal of him lately, but he would put it past them now," Duncan went out into the street, and putting the parcel down on the ground, leaned over it. He then lighted the "strum" with the match. At this moment some boys, attracted by his unusual attitude, came towards him. "Keep back," shouted Duncan, "for the love of God, or you will be blown into eternity!" This adjured the boys did keep back; and it was well that they did so, for a moment later there was a loud explosion which instantly killed the man, and Duncan was instantaneously blown to atoms. On the spot where the dynamite had been laid there was left a hole about three feet deep by two and a half wide.

TOOK HIM AT HIS WORD.
Monday evening a widow lady entered a well-known grocery store at the South End and engaged in conversation with the proprietor. The latter was taking down a barrel of flour; from a high stack of barrels for one of his customers, when the lady remarked that she should like a barrel of that flour, whereupon the grocer pleasantly replied, "I will give you a barrel if you will carry it home." The lady was pretty stocky, weighed some 300 pounds, and having reached up to the top of the stack of barrels, lifted one down, put it on a wheelbarrow and wheeled it to her home, some half a mile distant, being followed and cheered by a large crowd. To say that the grocer was surprised, is a mild way of putting it.—Boston Journal.

SEIZURE OF CONTRABAND GOODS AT CAPE CASPO.—Mr. John Jeffrey, the newly appointed Customs officer for the outpost of Cape Caspo, made a seizure on the 22nd ult. of liquor unlawfully landed—the property of one whose skill in the art of smuggling has never before been overtake—having banished all efforts to check him previously. Mr. Jeffrey has thus proved an efficient officer, quite adequate for the duty he has to perform. It will be well for smugglers to exercise due care how they repeat such a game, as the interests of the Customs are properly guarded by the newly appointed Collector at Caspo.
