A VISIT TO FOSTER A SON'S NAIL AND TACK WORKS—HOW RAILS AND TACKS ARE MADE—RAPID WORK.

BRIDGETOWN, FEBRUARY 14, 1877.

PRESIDENT GRANT.

In less than three weeks General Grant will have resigned the presidential chair of the American Union to his successor. For eight years he has presided over the destinies of a great nation. The eyes of forty millions have been turned upon him. His every act, whether public or private, has been watched, examined and criticized by a many-eyed and vigilant opposition. His domestic habits and movements have, as well as the measures and policy of his administration, have been thoroughly scrutinized, and have been subjected to unsparring strictures. In the Press—the platform—and in Congress, his acts have been exposed to the keenest severities of adverse commentary. His best deeds have been misrepresented and condemned, and his worst have been exaggerated. He has indeed passed a terrible ordeal. England's greatest poet has said:

"Uneasy is the head that wears a crown" but few contemporary monarchs have been more maligned, than has been Mr. Grant. To him the presidential chair has not been "a bed of roses." In his hours of repose, though, instead of down, have been in his pillow.

The early Presidents of the Republic were appreciated for their talents, esteemed for their patriotism, respected for their personal virtues, and despite their career in the highest official station in the United States, they descended from the seat of power, as does the sun on a cloudless Summer evening, surrounded with a halo of glory. But Grant's closing day of exalted position is enveloped in darkness. Those who are in antagonism with his administration have accused him of despotism, of an unseemly ambition for "a third term" retention of power, and of administrative corruption. Whether or not these accusations are righteously preferred against him we do not pretend to say or know. It is, however, certain that he has thrown the arms of protection around members of his cabinet, who have been justly charged with serious official misdemeanors, if not with crimes. During his first term many prominent and strong men of his party were dissatisfied with his official course, and were alienated from him. Among these (notably) was the late Horace Greeley, whose pen and talents were largely instrumental in placing Grant in the national chair. The policy and general tendency of his second term were more open to animadversion than the first; and gradually the best men of his party, one after another, have withdrawn from him their confidence and support. Whether or not his inefficiency or ambition tended most to the decrease of his popularity we are not prepared to say. While he was the occupant of the White House there was vast more corruption, to say nothing of ill-concealed bribery, both in the Administration and in Congress, than during any other period of the Republic's history; and he is going into the retirement of private life with an unenviable public reputation. Whatever may have been his merits as a military commander, it will be generally admitted that as a statesman he has been a failure.

CANADIAN LOYALTY

The London Standard publishes the following letter, which is dated 12th January, and signed "A Traveller."

At the present time, when England may possibly be drawn into war with the East, it may interest Englishmen to know what the feeling is in the Colonies. I have only just returned from an extended tour through the Dominion of Canada, where I had opportunities of meeting and conversing with people of nearly every class, from the lowest to the highest—more especially with the officers and men of the Canadian volunteers. In a determination to stand by the policy of the Imperial Government, and to aid by every means in my power to enforce that policy, our fellow-subjects in the great Dominion put Englishmen to a severe test. They are bringing the Eastern question down to the level of party issues, the Canadians look at it only in its bearing upon national or rather Imperial interests, and say that in defending these interests the Government must be supported by the whole strength of the Empire, at home and abroad. There are no finer men in the world. They are full of fight, they are good fighters, they are hardy, active, clear-headed fellows; and after a little experience in the field would be fit for anything. Sir Garnet Wolseley knows the sort of stuff they are made of. I am sure he would like nothing better than to have a brigade of them at his back, and the enemy in front; and he is likely to have it should war break out. It is known at the Horse Guards, though the public may not know it, that through their officers several thousand Canadian volunteers have placed their services at the disposal of the Imperial Government. They are ready to come on the shortest notice. Not a few Canadians sleep in the Crimea; there are several under Napier at Magdalen; three or four followed Wolseley through Athabasca, and there are thousands prepared to cross the sea to assist in defending the old flag should the occasion require. No doubt other colonies are ready to follow the noble example of Canada. This is something Englishmen should be proud of, and it is well that they should know that the Canadians are so true to their blood and parentage.

The Ames Plow Company of Worcester, Mass., now occupy two acres with buildings and stock in the northern part of the city, employ 160 men, make 300 steel plows and other tools to match, and are at work on orders from Africa and South America. They have one building, four stoves a high, devoted to patterns.

A CURIOUS PAIR OF JAWS.

Don't you think it must be a curious pair of jaws that can bite a chunk of cold iron as easily as you can bite a stick of candy? You can hardly believe it. Wait till I tell you.

One of the most interesting places we have visited is the Messrs. Foster's nail and tack works, where there is a large room filled with these monsters with the sharp steel jaws, called nail machines. His first place the apse made by so many of these machines in one room is something absolutely fearful. I wanted to start my ears with cotton, but I thought that would not be civil to my guide, and after a little while I got used to it, and soon found myself so interested that I really forgot the noise. Some machines nip off the tacks so fast that a stream of finished tacks run down an iron spout into a box or reservoir prepared for the purpose—thousands in a minute. Listen to the ticking of the clock and reflect that at least thirty tacks are snapped off to the tick. But I must tell you how they are made. First, then, the iron wire is made from bars or blooms at iron works for that purpose, where it is put through immense iron rollers, which flatten it out as nicely as a cook can roll a pie crust with a rolling pin. It is first made into a sheet just thick enough for the nails they are to make. The sheet next goes to the shearing machine, which makes no more faces about slitting it into the proper widths for nails, than your scissors about cutting paper. It is cut a little wider than the nail or tack is to be, because the heads are to be made. When the strips of iron are all ready, a man takes and clips the ends into the steel jaw I told you of. These jaws are worked by steam power, and in a steady they bite off a nail, while a furious hammer springs out suddenly, and with one blow on the end of the bit of iron flattens it out, and thus makes a head. If you want to know what a blow it must be, take a piece of iron and try to pound a nail into it yourself. The instant the head is made, the jaws open and the nail drops out, finished. Of course, it is done much quicker than I have been telling you, for a machine can make shoes, hats, which I need not tell the boys are small nails with out heads at the rate of 2,000 a minute. It is said that "Foster's works," and I hope they want it, but I must admit it is hard to believe that story.—St. John Telegraph. 11

THE BURDETT ORGAN'S CENTENNIAL TRIUMPH.

The Burdett Organ at the Centennial Exposition, which caused the Burdett Organ Company's exhibit to be pronounced by judges, artists, and visitors generally, "the finest and best of its kind," was constructed by that master of the art and invention, Riley Burdett, in accordance with the following scheme:

- Solo Manual.—1. Viol d'Amers. 2. Clarinet. 3. Clarinet. 4. Fifteenth. 5. Cello. 6. Fagotto. 7. Melodia. 8. Echo Horn. 9. Diapason. 10. Cor Anglais. 11. Celeste. 12. Flute. Great Organ.—13. Trumpet. 14. Principal. 15. Vox Cœli. 16. Dul. Cim. 17. Sac but. 18. Wald Horn. 19. Hautbois. 20. Roman Pipe. 21. Viola. 22. Ophicleide. Mechanical.—23. Ped Check. 24. Comp Pedal to Great. 25. Comp Choir to Solo. 26. Vox Humana. 27. Octave Coupler. 28. Comp Great to Choir. 29. Swell. 30. Grand Organ.

This marvel of wood and cabinet work measures 13 feet 8 inches in height, 7 feet 6 inches in length, and 3 feet 8 inches in depth. It is probably the largest purely reed organ ever made, its pipe-top being 10 feet 6 inches in length. It was in fact a very beautiful design, finished elaborately and elegantly, the principal woods used in it being French and American walnut and ash. The richness of its musical contents is shown through its triple manual, thirty stops and pedastel. The organist is charmed with its profusion of novel and delightful vocal effects, and finds eminent satisfaction in its exceptional tone-power.

This organ and the three others exhibited by the Burdett Organ Company were subject to a very exciting critical examination by the Centennial Musical Jury who unanimously awarded the Burdett Organ Company the grand medal and special diploma. A careful reading of the judges' award and commendation of it will find the awards given by them to other organ makers are "monotony" and "bad quality" of tone. In avoiding or trying to avoid monotony they generally kill the tone quality, and in seeking for good tone-quality they generally run to monotony. But the Centennial Musical Jury declare, as among the first and most remarkable and judicious expositions of the Burdett organ "a variety" and "good quality of tone" and the jury award the Burdett Organ Company the grand medal for these excellently. But the Centennial Musical Jury also award the Burdett organ a special diploma, and in seeking for good tone-quality they generally run to monotony. But the Centennial Musical Jury declare, as among the first and most remarkable and judicious expositions of the Burdett organ "a variety" and "good quality of tone" and the jury award the Burdett Organ Company the grand medal for these excellently. Again, some organs may sing, yet "sing with whining tongue" as it is popularly said. But the Centennial Musical Jury award the Burdett organ a special diploma, and in seeking for good tone-quality they generally run to monotony. But the Centennial Musical Jury declare, as among the first and most remarkable and judicious expositions of the Burdett organ "a variety" and "good quality of tone" and the jury award the Burdett Organ Company the grand medal for these excellently.

Our readers know that for many years the French harmonium was the popular reed instrument, and that in former years, and even now, in some of our Southern and Canadian cities, the harmonium, with its thin, shrill, metallic tone, still sells. The Burdett Organ Company have changed all this, and secured for the musical public an instrument so different from the harmonium—in all those essential elements of a reed organ specified by the Centennial Musical Jury in their award to the Burdett Organ Company—as to be really another instrument, having nothing scarcely in common with the harmonium but the matter of materials. Here in France and England, and elsewhere, the Centennial Musical Jury award to the Burdett Organ Company, the grand medal and special diploma, and in seeking for good tone-quality they generally run to monotony. SPECIAL SESSIONS.

Pursuant to requisition and notice, a Special Session of the Peace was held in the Court House, Annapolis, on Wednesday, the 7th inst., to consider the Adversity of Petitioning Legislature to act aside the late awards made in the Western Counties' Railway, and also of considering all matters in connection of Appraisement of Damages of said line.

Present, Justices A. W. Corbett, H. F. Burns, Edw. Bartlett, D. J. Morse, Silas Potter, M. Tupper, N. H. Balch, S. B. Bell, W. B. Troop, Robert Mills, Edmund Clark, et al.

Moved by H. F. Burns, Esq., seconded by D. J. Morse, Esq., That in the opinion of this Court it would not be advisable to petition the Legislature to act aside the Award made in the matters of the Western Counties' Railway. The Resolution was carried.

Moved, that the Court adjourn.

J. G. H. PARKER, Clerk of the Peace, Annapolis, Feb. 8th, 1877.

AMERICAN WAY TO THE NORTH POLE.

There is really only one feasible plan for reaching the North Pole. A succession of camps should be made from Smith's sound northwards at intervals of half a mile from one another. In each of these camps two or three men, provided with a few years' rations, should be placed, with instructions which they desired to reach the Pole and to keep a lamp constantly burning in the kitchen window as a beacon for belated travelers, and to keep the side-walk swept for the next camp. The explorer who desired to reach the Pole would have an uninterrupted series of half-mile stations all the way to his place of destination. He could warm his feet at one station, lunch at another and sleep at a third. Thus, by safe and easy stages, he could reach and discover the Pole and return to Smith's sound without difficulty. The Arctic explorer can always travel half a mile in a given direction, divide the distance from Smith's sound to the Pole into half-mile walks, and all the difficulties which are now insuperable would vanish. This is undoubtedly the true way in which Arctic exploration should be conducted, and it is a wonder that no one has hitherto thought of it.—New York Times.

The Fresno (Cal.) Examiner of the 17th of January says that a flock of wild geese, forming a solid column of birds seven miles in length, passed over that town the day before.
