Expenditure Far Outstrips Revenue Fielding Admits A Waning Surplus TO SECURE DURABLE PEACE

Claims Country is $15,000,000 Ahead for Fiscal Year Just Closed - Says Government Motto is Spend Freely but Wisely-Few Slight Changes In the Tariff.

Hon. Mr. Foster Declares Surplus is a Most Convenient One and Depends for Its Ex-Istence on a Mere Juggling of Figures That is Without Reason.

Ottawa, July 6 .- (Special.) - With the proverbial flourish of trumpets, Hon-W. S. Fielding to-day introduced the budget. In spite of the forced applause at convenient intervals from the Liberal side of the house, it must be confessed that the effort of the finance minister was not a scintillating success. There was lots of sparkle and a plethora of nicely rounded phrases, but they meant little. For Mr. Fielding, in spite of his heroics, did not have an easy job to tackle. He had to explain, as will be seen in his statement, a largely increased expenditure. His explanation was sugar-coated, but the bitter pill was there all the same-the fact that an increased expenditure has largely overbalanced the increase in revenue. Another fact wa smade evident, and will continue to do so. The surplus for the year just closed was not so large as that of last year.

Hon. George E. Foster, criticizing the statement, pointed out the large liabilities of the next few years and uttered a word of warning. Money will have to be raised shortly at the specific time when the country is seemingly pledged to the hilt for running expenses.

The tariff, as had been predicted, was dealt with yeary gingerly, and the old The tarili, as had been predicted, was dealt with very gingerly, and the old war horse of an excuse was trotted out that the tariff commission would be appointed shortly and would deal with a great many matters left untouched. It the budget. After some discussion the house went into committee on the tariff resolutions. The resolutions were reported and the bill founded on them read a first and second time. The taread a first and second time. The tariff bill will be read a third time to-n row. The house adjourned at midnight.
His Ninth Budget.

began by saying that this was the ninth time it had been his privilege to pre-sent the annual statement of the finan-cial affairs of the Dominion. He resent the annual statement of the financial affairs of the Dominion. He regretted that the budget of the present year had been unavoidable and had not led to any public inconvenience, since it had been well understood that there would be no extensive tariff changes during the present session, and the government had made known its intention of conducting an inquiry by a commission of ministers before undertaking any extensive revision.

Sometimes the question was raised as to the manner in which the surplus was calculated, and it was argued that no surplus could be claimed unless the reverue had provided for all expenses without exception. In his judgment this criticism was unsound and it was accepted. While no official confirmation is obtainable at Oyster Bay of the aucentertained by every finance minister who ever occupied the position. Works which were of a special and mostly of a pormanent character were always charged to capital account. There was one item to capital account. There was one item now charged to capital account that had not been so charged by his predeces-sors, viz., bountles on iron and steel Hi<sub>3</sub> predecessors had treated these as draw-backs from the customs revenue and had deducted the amount of such bounties from the customs revenue, thus practically charging the bounties to income. At that time bounties were not very large and the practice had been continued one or two verse by the Lib. continued one or two years by the Liberals. When the bounties increased to large figures it was decided that they should be charged to special account, along with railway subsidies, etc. But between charging bounties to income and to capital would not affect to any considerable extent the question of surplus. If these bounties were deducted the surplus for eight years would be $53.107.692 or an average for each reservi-

"A gratifying increase" is reported in receipts from customs, excise and postal service; and a material decrease from Dominion lands, due to decreased receipts from the Yukon.

The times have come when only a moderate increase in revenue, but a largely increased expenditure are to be expected. The government is not afraid to spend wisely, believing it to be true economy.

Loans will continue maturing yearly until 1913; then a long period without any.

The government will pay a bonus of 3-8 of one per cent. for the return from banks of foreign silver in exchange for Canadian currency. It is expected to benefit the country by increasing Canadian
