Closing Scenes of the Emerson Trial.

The Judge Explains the Difference Between Murder and Manslaughter.

Jury Returns a Verdict of "Not Guilty" Amid Applause by the Audience.

SATURDAY MORNING. At $:30 the court room was again filled to the doors. Interest in the Emerson case is unabated, and the curious crowd collects in every available place to get a look at the prisoner. THE JUDGE'S CHARGE. The judge occupied an hour and firteen minutes in delivering his charge to the jury. He said: "You have rightly been told that this is a great case; that the duty which you now have to perform is a momentous one. It is right that I should, in the first place, tell you that your powers are not so absolute or unlimited as you might ga-ther from some of the remarks that fell jury, and a moment later the prisoner ther from some of the remarks that fell from the lips of the learned counsel for jury, and a moment later the prisoner recovered my powers of locomotion, and the defense. You have been asked to give back to someone the life of the great mental strain, his wife leaning long slender best Long than the life of the great mental strain, his wife leaning long slender best prisoner. You have no power to give back to anyone or take from anyone his life. You have been asked to set him free. You have no power in your own discretion to set him free or to send him to prison. Whatever the result of this trial, you have to do your duty fearlessly. The law of the land is the outcome of wisdom of legislators for hundreds of years. Whether it is too hard or too lenient, you and I must administer it as it is-neither you nor I have any power to alter it. Your duty is simply to find the facts. My duty is to tell you what the law is. I must accept your finding of the facts implicitly, and you must act upon the law as I have explained it to you. If I err, and a wrong is done, there is a higher court that will correct that error and right that wrong. Bearing all these things in our minds, let us approach the facts of the case."

"On Friday night, April 1, a human life was taken by an act of violence. It is right that there should be strictest scrutiny into the circumstances of the taking of that life. We are here to perform part of that duty. It is right that the man who took that life should be called upon to give an account for his actions. The man himself recognized that, and gave himself up to the custody of the law. It would not have made any difference if he had not given himself up. It is fortunate for you that the facts of this case are different from the facts in the majority of cases where the crime of murder is charged. Usually there are no eye-witnesses. Your duties are much simplified by the fact that there is no denying that the life of James Tuttle was taken by the act of violence of William D. Emerson. Your duty now is to find the truth in regard to the circumstances under which that life was taken. If those circumstances are considered to be such as I will tell you, the law justifies the act of the prisoner. Then your verdict must be 'not guilty,' no matter how wrong, in a moral, or any other sense, you may think them to have been. You have no alternative. You cannot say that you think the man should be punished. You must return a verdict of "not guilty" and I must let him go.

The judge then said he wished to correct an impression, if impression had been made, of a remark that fell from Smith Bros., plumbers, died yesterday the lips of one of the counsel, namely, that there was little difference tween the crime of murder and the crime of manslaughter. A man re-sponsible for the loss of life through negligence was guilty of manslaughter. "The law," he continued, "makes a vast difference between the crimes. For the crime of murder there is one judg-ment which can be pronounced—that of 'guilty.' For the crime of manslaughter, according to the best judgment of the court, the judgment pronounced can be imprisonment for one day, one week, one month, one year, or several years. or lifetime, as the judge, within his discretionary power, determines. Starting, then, with the admitted fact that the life was taken by the prisoner, what are the circumstances under which it was taken?" The defense, he said, admitted Emerson fired the shot, but the jury would have to say whether it was intentional or accidental. The only direct testimony regarding that was the testimony of the prisoner. He said he determine. The jury must bear in mind the probabilities and the improbabilities of a man stretching a point in his own favor in this case." He drew attention to the fact of the prisoner having gone into the box and given evidence in his own behalf, of the nature of his evidence. If a man points a pistol at a man, and it explodes and death is caused, that man is guilty of manslaughter, though he might spend the rest of his days in sorrow. The prisoner was guilty of manslaughter if they considered that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant the prisoner in pointing the

The judge said the words that Emerson had used, "I did it," meant that he did it, and if he could not mitigate or justify that act he was guilty of murder. The greatest difficulty which they would have to consider in the case was, "did the circumstances justify or excuse the act?" The judge explained the law to show that a man could repel force with force, but was not permitted to go beyond what was necessary. Let me impress these words upon your memory. If the pris-oner believed on reasonable grounds that he could not preserve himself from death or grievous bodily harm, then he was justified," but the jury The prisoner and his wife said that Others of trade, that an effort be made to thought that it was the natural rewas a most extraordinary story, and as Mr. Johnston had said, had it stood alone he would not have asked them

Referring again to Laughlin's story, and Mrs. Emerson's corroboration of it, the judge asked, "Is it a concocted story, or was it an attempt to deceive and mislead justice?" There were, he said, persons foolish enough to do anything to make notoriety, and make statements that could not be contralordship went into many other details and concluded as follows: "Go and do your duty. Exercise your best judgment. Upon your own conscience give a true verdict, according to the evirevenge for the dead, or sympathy for the living. There was a huzz when Deputy But he did neither. Straight on he room. There was a buzz when Deputy on his arm. Hers was a grief not well described, and his anxiety was one that no tongue could tell.

When the jury arrived, the clerk asked if a verdict had been found. He was answered by the foreman in a clear

"We find the prisoner not guilty." Mrs. Emerson sprang from the chair and fell into her husband's arms. The cheer that followed the announcement was deafening. Men and women raised their voices, and waved hats and handkerchiefs. So great was the noise that the constable's cries for order could not be heard.

When silence had been restored, Emerson's face grew pale, and he stood up in the dock to await the pleasure of the court.

A pin could have been heard to drop, and the judge took this opportunity of condemning the action of the spectators. He said "I am surprised. I am ashamed. I did not expect such conduct by people in a court of justice." Turning to Mr. Heyd, he asked if there was anything else against had found him. the prisoner.

"No, my lord," was the reply. The judge, addressing Emerson, informed him that he had been found innocent of a most grevious charge, and that his action was justified. His character was clean, and in the eves of the law he was free from crime in connection with the taking of the life of James Tuttle. The judge closed with the remark, "You are a free man." Emerson then stepped from the dock, and received congratulations from all present. The verdict was rendered at 2:10 p.m.

A WELCOME AT THE GRIGG. Emerson, his wife and child, were escorted from the court house to a hack drawn by two white horses. They were driven to the Grigg House, via Dundas and Richmond streets, followed by many on foot and on bicycles. When the carriage drew up at the Grigg House entrance, a large crowd blocked the sidewalk, and as the actor elighted three hearty cheers were given him. He smiled, and took off his hat. The happy couple managed to squeeze through the door, and immediately went upstairs, where they were affectionately greeted by a company of friends, and the employes of the hotel. Emerson then went to his room.

A FIGHTING SNAKE

It Boldly Attacks Two Men in a Boat.

A Desp trate Pursuit-The Snake Shot at and Then Clubbed.

Fishing one day in a bayou of the Pearl River, with one companion, we sat ip opposite ends of a long, light boat, but did not come to a sharp point. It had but three seats-one at each end, and a middle seat. When a change of position was desired, we sunk a light paddle in the water, and quietly propelled the boat by strokes under the water so as to make no splashing. My end of the boat had turned toward the nearest bank, which was distant about 30 feet, and lying asleep on a log at the water's edge I noticed a moccasin of very fair proportions.

Signaling to my companion, I pointed to the snake, that he might hold the boat steady while I tried a shot at it with a little pocket pistol—a 22-caliber -that we always carried on our trips, and in the use of which constant practo believe it. The jury were not bound to believe anything. Witness might honestly mislead a jury and themselves, too. Juries, like judges, had to be very careful in sift-ing the evidence. ing a fair mark that I could hit nine times in ten shots, hoping to break his spine. My pistol was a single shot, which was usually no disadvantage in shooting at snakes, as they always took to the water if not disabled at the first shot. Taking a very careful aim at the fair mark presented by the snake's body on the log, I fired.

The boat must have moved slightly dicted, and he asked was that the position of Emerson. He reviewed the evidence, and after pointing out that a ed. Instead of going through the man might concoct a story, gave the jury to understand that this was not likely to be the cocco with the cocco jury to understand that this was not likely to be the case with Emerson. His like a hot iron, judging by its actions. After a quick quiver and full length squirm, he began to bow his back and spit like an angry cat.

This was so very unusual that it amused us very much, and we sat dence, unswayed, unmoved by pity or laughing heartily for a moment or two, expecting every instant that the snake would take to the water and disappear. Suddenly the snake swung round with its head stretched out in our direction, and plunged into the water, but did not disappear. Thrashing through the water like mad, he made straight for me with an air of business that cured my attack of laughing promptly and effectually.

I was paralyzed with fright, but could not believe that the snake was really coming to attack us, and sat looking at his approach, expecting every moment that he would dive or came until he was but a few feet from chance of routes, so straight down the long, slender boat, I dashed towards the end my companion occupied, clearing the middle seat with a jump that nearly drove the bottom out. My companion had started up with a startled cry to "Look out!" and had grasped a heavy paddle lying in the bottom of the boat, but seeing me bearing down on him in a wild flight, that was certain to carry us both over the end of the boat into 20 feet of water, he dropped the paddle, stooped low, and caught me with an approved football tackle hold just above the knees, and together we fell with a clash against the end seat, my head striking with such force that I was dazed and rendered almost unconscious. Springing to his feet my friend snatched up the paddle and ran to the end of the boat that I had fled from, and found the snake still in pursuit, although the boat had moved some distance from the impetus given by the sudden arresting of my flight. Not until he had received a blow that almost disabled him did that pugnacious serpent retire from the attack. He then swam back to the bank and crawled out on the very log on which first we When I had sufficiently recovered from the knock on the head, and gathered my scattered wits, we held a council of war, and there was a division in the camp. The man who was not make-timid was in favor of going right in and whipping out the enemy with our heavy paddles; while the man who was most decidedly snake-timid was in favor of a general and immediate retreat from the unpleasant, and, to him, unfortunate location. We finally compromised by landing the boat at a point some distance from the enemy, and the able-bodied contingent went to the attack alone, while the sick and wounded stood guard at the boat. The snake refused to retreat to the water, and was killed with a long pole while still showing fight. This is no exaggeration of the attack of the only moccasin that I ever saw "carry the war into Africa."-Lewis Hopkins, in Forest and Stream.
