LOCAL BLACK FOX STORY

It was said some weeks ago that a black fox had been seen on the Sandy Point road, but whether this is correct or not is not known. For the last few weeks, however, there has been a fox den not so very far from the city limits watched with close interest by a local huntsman, who was so sure of the inmates being black in color that he sent to the states and procured the latest patented equipment for their capture. He set the apparatus about the den, and lay out for the greater part of a night recently in the hope of capturing one or more of the animals, but evidently the little creatures had become suspicious of his being so frequently in the neighborhood and had migrated to others quarters. At any rate the equipment was tried and worked successfully except for the fact that the foxes did not come out, for they had already fled, and thus a neat-sized fortune may have been lost. The woodsman in question is very well experienced in the craft of the forest, and is a firm in his conviction that the animals which had used the den during the winter were black.

For sealing fruit jars a Wisconsin man has patented an implement that pressed the tops against the rubber rings until airtight points are made.
