FOREIGN MUSICIANS PLAN U. S. INVASION TO GATHER DOLLARS

Many New Singers, Pianists And Violinists to Rush Across The Seas for Desired Shelves

(By Pierre V. R. Key, special correspondent.)

New York, June 21.—The gleamers are getting ready for their annual harvest of good American dollars. The foreign invasion of Europe's musical colony is at hand. How much, cash will they carry home with them when the approaching season, soon to open, is over? Judging by past experiences it will be several millions.

The golden glitter of coin stamped with Uncle Sam's and Canada's mark will flash in many a country, that is sure. And singers, pianists, violinists and others with long hair and the dreamy-eyed expression will smile after the harvest and plan for the next picking.

Musicians of St. John, whose favorable opinion is valued by managers to the same extent as by the artists themselves, will be given abundant opportunity during the coming season to pass upon the qualifications of many of these musical newcomers and to renew their acquaintance with musicians who have been heard at various times in America during the last half dozen years.

Ernest Zumbach, a violinist credited with having caused fine impressions in England and on the continent, will make his first appearance in this country before long. He is described as a player of the Fritz Kreisler type, with a fine but not large tone, a fluent technique and a straightforward manner. His work will be wholly different from that of Mischa Elman, who is not to return this fall.

Jan Kubelik, whose sensational successes in previous years will be long remembered, is announced to arrive here in the autumn after a four-year's absence. He is reported to have gained in artistic breadth which will give us some music distinctly worth while. Kathleen Parlow, the young Canadian violinist whose triumphs of the season have recently closed, were little short of spectacular, likewise will make a wide tour.

Among the singers to cross the Atlantic to make debuts in 1911-12 will be Heinrich Weil, the German operatic baritone; Margarete Matzenauer, a European contralto of whom excellent reports are heard; the American baritone, Putnam Griswold, who won his opera spurs in various parts of Europe, and Heinrich Hensel, a German tenor whose musical achievements in his own land have brought him fame. All these singers join the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Maggie Teyte, an English soprano who has sung Mary Garden's roles abroad with conspicuous success, will be a member of the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company, and like the four Metropolitan recruits will devote much of her time to concertizing. Miss Teyte, it is stated, will be a full-fledged rival to Miss Garden. If this should transpire General Manager Andrew D'Amico will have his troubles in keeping the operatic waters surrounding his organization in a state of tranquility.

Frieda Hempel, the coloratura star of the Berlin Royal Opera, may be given a leave of absence by Emperor William to sing Mary Garden's roles abroad with conspicuous success, will be a member of the Philadelphia-Chicago Opera Company, and like the four Metropolitan recruits will devote much of her time to concertizing.

THE HISTORY OF H. P.

Every popular commodity has a history of paramount interest to somebody. Here is the history of H. P. Sauce—worth a try, it will interest you.

At Birmingham, England, there is a very large malt vinegar brewery, in fact, the largest in the world, and as malt vinegar is the essential foundation of all high-class sauces, the proprietors of this vinegar brewery are constantly in touch with all kinds of sauces.

Now some time ago, it occurred to them that nearly all the sauces on the market were far too thin and pungent, and too imperfectly blended to be worthy of the name of relishes and that if a rich sauce, of super-excellent fruity flavor, and thick, creamy consistency were produced, and placed on the market at a very moderate price per bottle, its success would be assured.

They forthwith began to experiment very carefully at their great vinegar brewery. The choicest Oriental fruits and spices were judiciously blended together, and skillfully blended with the malt vinegar, but not till had they reached the point of perfection in flavor, appearance and consistency, was the sauce christened "H. P." (an abbreviation of the name "House of Parliament") and sent out to the world in a new way in the world.

H. P. does not settle in the bottle, there is no sediment and it therefore requires no shaking. If poured the edge of the plate it can be taken with the meat like mustard. It possesses a delicious flavor, quite distinctively fruity and always leaves a clean, fruity taste in the mouth, instead of the burning and stinging sensation left behind by old-fashioned ketchup.

Dr. A. Rostock Hill, M. D., D. P. H., P. C., county analyst in analyzing a bottle of H. P. Sauce reports:—"It is made from the best materials, is of pleasant and piquant flavor, and is in every respect a thoroughly good Sauce."

Under these exceptionally favorable circumstances it is small wonder that the history of H. P. is a tale of unequalled success.

A road made of leather waste treated with tar at Birmingham, Eng., shows practically no signs of wear after being used a year. Heavy wheels make no impression on it, and it is a comfortable material for horses to tread on. Roads made of this material are declared practically dustless.

Seven of the fifty aviators who started reached Liege, 212 miles from Paris, the end of the first stage, within the prescribed time. Eight others are at various points near Liege unable to get through in time.

Two aviators met death almost immediately after the flight had started, and the third was killed at Chateaux-Thierry, about thirty miles from the French capital.

They didn't want an auto; They much preferred to walk, But they were rich and got one For fear that folks would say.

They were really democratic. Liked to live in simple way, But kept four servants just for fear Of what some folks would say.

They liked the comic opera. Couldn't bear the heavy play, But patronized them all for fear Of what some folks would say.

They never acted natural. Their lives, in work or play Were ordered carefully for fear Of what some folks would say.

And when they die, it is their hope— They'll die of something that's in style, Or what will people say.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS OF VALUE IN CONDENSED FORM

The latest number of the Canadian Bulletin reviewing the publications of the International Agricultural Institute is at hand. It contains seventy-five pages, made up almost entirely of interesting condensed articles selected from the current agricultural literature of the world, including British bulletins and reports issued by the more advanced countries. It also contains the latest available statistics regarding crops of many countries and the live stock of the world.

In view of the universal increase in the price of meats, the tables representing the live stock population of some thirty of the leading countries of special interest. The tables published indicate the number of each of cattle, sheep and swine existing in the nearest years to 1900 and 1910 for which figures are available; also the number of live stock per 1,000 inhabitants at the same dates. The tables reveal the following conditions:

Cattle.—In the group of countries considered, the total number has increased. The number per 1,000 inhabitants has also increased, the population having increased by 13.1 per cent and the cattle by 17.6 per cent.

It is interesting to note that, though the total number of cattle in Europe has increased, the number per thousand has decreased; for while the population has increased by 12.2 per cent, the number of cattle has only increased by 4.4 per cent.

In America and in Australia the proportionate increase in cattle has been greater than that of the population.

Sheep.—In the group of countries considered, the total number has increased, but the number per 1,000 inhabitants has decreased, the population having increased by 13.2 per cent and the number of sheep by 8.5 per cent. It should be noted that the number of sheep per 1,000 inhabitants decreased by 2.2 per cent.

Swine.—In the group of countries considered, the total number has increased. The number per 1,000 inhabitants has also increased, the population having increased by 14.0 per cent and the number of swine by 19.2 per cent.

It is interesting to note that, though the total number of swine in Europe has increased, the number per 1,000 inhabitants has slightly decreased, the population having increased by 12.2 per cent, while the number of swine has increased only by 12.9 per cent.

In America the proportionate increase in the number of swine is greater than that

THE DRUG CLERK

A Difference in This Work Now Compared to What It Was

The drug clerk sighed wearily and replaced the jar of lime drops on its shelf after having poured lower a dozen for a young woman and received a nickel therefor.

The lime drops had consolidated in the fat glass jar until it might have been worth while to investigate them as a street paving material.

"You seem unhappy," ventured the calm-faced man leaning on the cigar counter. "What's the matter?" The drug clerk, who had been just as though he represented the whole world in which he had to live.

"You've never been a pharmacist?" he snorted. "All those years of study—all those books—all those lectures—all that blamed work in the laboratory, and here I am handing out lime drops and chewing gum to the public. The smoker looked sympathetic.

"I'm supposed to fill prescriptions," said the drug clerk. "I'm supposed to have sense enough not to get the quinine and the strychnine mixed. I'm supposed to read Latin and understand what doctor is represented by the scrawl he puts on his prescriptions.

"And do fill prescriptions? Maybe once a week. The rest of the time I sell gum and toothbrushes and nail polish and toothpicks. I'm a scientist—yes. It takes brainwork to sell a toothbrush.

"And I have to sell postage stamps to the women, and they stand at the cigar counter and paste them on, taking all day, while half of our cigar customers are waiting and some leaving in disgust.

"There ain't such a thing as a drug clerk now," he finished. "In the old days a drug clerk dealt in drugs and was a sort of understudy doctor. But not now. Why, I've even—"

Then he broke off short and went across the store to sell a cake of peanut oil soap to a lady with a straw hat and a set of near furs, who was undecided whether she wanted peanut oil or waterproof soap, finally deciding on the former.

Then the drug clerk went behind the prescription case, for he had been postponing a very important task—the putting of glycerine in very small bottles to sell for ten cents, and labelling them—Galveston News.
