The Physiology of the Liver, The liver is the largest scoreting organ in the human body, and the bile which it scoretes is more liable to vitiation and misdirection from its proper channels than any other of the animal fluids. Luckily for the bilious, how-ever, there is an unfailing source of relief from itser compliaint, namely Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a medicine which for over a quarter of a century has been achieving therough cures with an egg, divide into small cakes, and fry them a light brown. Experience in Budding The season for budding is over, but it is not too late to note what may be of uture service. While looking over a future service. While looking over a bed of young trees grown up from buds set a year ago, I^{σ} found some labels which had been attached then. One said : "The lower buds on these trees (marked X) were kept in water five minutes after being cut from the stick." The buds so treated grew as well as the others. Another label referred to peach buds that had been sliced off so thin as ouds that had been sliced off so thin as buds that had been sliced off so thin as to take none of the wood, and better in another trial, in which the wood of the buds was, immature and seemed to de-compose and propagate decay. In these cases dewooded buds grew most success-fully. In two other trials buds of ripe wood succeeded, although some had ain on the ground half a minute (in shade), and others had been sliced off with a still further dull knife. Green Foods.

It is remarked by a German paper at there is a great difference in the tritive qualities of different foods, mmonly known as green foods, and mmonly known as green foods, and so that they vary with the age of the ant; thus in clover and lnosrn the bat important substances or principles crease in quality as the plants grow in quality as the plants grow ler. This materially alters the nouring properties, and the feeder has to ard against this deterioration by anging the food, or by the addition of ttle dry fool and hay and the like, and mixed. There are some advanes in dry food which cannot be found green ; for instance, when cut in protime and well secured, there is a e proportion of saccharine matter in w hay, clover and lucern, which does exist in a green state. On the ner hand, there is no change for the ter in green fodder as it grows older, ; quite the reverse, as the fibre benes more woody.
