

Situated at the upper end of this reserve is their most valued salmon fishery, the entire length of which is within the reserve.

No. 2.

Alberni, a reserve of 130 acres situated immediately south of the Alberni Mill Company's land on the east bank of the Alberni canal. It is used principally as a camping ground by the Indians when returning from their fishing excursions at the mouth of the sound. There is an abundance of timber for all purposes, and it is supplied with a never failing spring of water.

No. 3.

I-wa-chis, a reserve of 25 acres, situated on the east bank of Alberni Canal at the First Narrows. It is frequented by the Indians when fishing for dogfish; a small stream flows through its entire length and a limited number of salmon is obtained here. The land is of poor quality but well supplied with timber.

No. 4.

Tse-oo-wa, a small fishing station situated on the east side of Rainy Bay, containing seven acres, used only during the dogfish season. About one acre might be cultivated as a garden, otherwise it is of little value.

No. 5.

Ah-mit-sa, containing 30 acres, is a reserve on Seddall Island, Rainy Bay. It adjoins the land of Mr. Warren (who here maintains a trading post), and is used as a camping place, and a dogfish station.

No. 6.

Cle-ho, a reserve of 12 acres, for fishing purposes, situated on Nettle Island. It is covered with fine timber, but otherwise is valueless.

No. 7.

Keith Island contains about 25 acres; on it stands the fishing station of Ka-Ka-muek-a-mil. The timber on this island is unusually fine, and is much prized by the Indians.

No. 8.

E-quis, once one of the principal villages of the She-shasts Indians, though now almost deserted, is situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles east of Lyall Point, Barclay Sound. Here I have reserved 120 acres on account of its suitability as an Indian settlement. The land is level—of good quality—partly covered with large spruce and cedar. Shell-fish are abundant; there is a small salmon fishery on the reserve, and as a dog fish and sealing station, it is both convenient and well sheltered.

No. 9.

O-mo-ah, a reserve situated on Village Island, near the entrance to Barclay Sound, contains 30 acres, and is a favorite seal fishing station. As regards soil it is worthless, being all rocky, there is, however, an abundance of timber for all purposes, chiefly spruce, hemlock and cedar.

With the exception of reserve No. 1, the land assigned to these Indians is not of great value, except as fishing stations, yet, on the whole, they are well provided for;
