A gritty proposal

OTTAWA (CUP) — A member of the Liberal party's task force on post-secondary education is calling for a national council to address "an immense crisis" in the country's universities.

Newfoundland MP Bill Rompkey has introduced a private member's bill to the House of Commons to establish a Canadian Post-Secondary Education Council. The bill has received the first of three readings required before a passage. "A national strategy for education is absolutely essential," said Rompkey. He said following his cross-country tour with the Liberal task force, "I have no doubt in mind that there is a crisis in post-secondary education in Canada."

Rompkey's proposal would call for a national advisory body, with representation from the federal and provincial governments, administrators, faculty and students.

Not surprisingly, Rompkey has received no support from provincial ministers responsible for post-secondary education, who say the Council of Ministers of Education already deals with the same issues. Rompkey disagrees. "I don't think anybody thinks their council is truly a national body," he said. "There is no participation from the federal government, or the university community itself."

Rompkey's bill is similar to one proposed by the Canadian Association of University Teachers, who called for a stronger and more influential body. CAUT president Allan Sharp said Rompkey's bill may, however, pass because it is more "realistic".

"All one can really hope for right now is an agency that can at least carry on informed debate," said Sharp, who said the council should also have some capacity for research.

The federal government is planning to save almost $2 billion over the next five years through limited growth in transfer payments to the provinces. Sharp said the federal record on education and research warrants a council. "There is no mechanism for placing education on the federal agenda, and yet this is an area where the government spends billions of dollars," said Sharp.

The Canadian Federation of Students is initially supportive of the council. "In principle, we support the creation of such a council. It is a very wise idea," said CFS researcher Jean Wright.

Rompkey hopes the bill's second reading will come before spring.

Sports not suds

TORONTO (CUP) — Brewery sponsorship of university athletics may become a thing of the past if the Council of Ontario Universities has its way.

The COU, which represents the presidents of the province's 15 universities, is concerned about student drinking, and has asked its members to review their policies on brewery sponsorship of athletic events.

As a result, many athletic departments could find themselves losing lucrative advertising revenue and scrambling for new sponsors.

COU spokesperson William Sayers says the recommendation resulted from the findings of a special committee on athletics. "It came to their attention that the volume of sponsorships and the dollars involved were considerable," he said.

Some universities had abandoned brewery sponsorship long before the COU recommendation.

The day the music died

SASKATOON (CUP) — Campus radio at the University of Saskatchewan became campus history in November.

Members of the U of S Students' Union council voted to "cease all efforts and activities related to the establishment of the USSSU-owned radio station."

The 22 to 6 vote on Nov. 13 followed emotional debate both on council and across campus.

One USSU executive member said two separate surveys showed students did not consider the campus radio station, CHSK, important.

Kevin Doherty said a group of U of S Commerce marketing students found students' priorities in terms of USSU funding and space were "from highest to lowest, campus legal aid, reading lounge, offices for clubs, campus chaplains, Grad students association, radio station."

The other survey, by a private company, came to similar conclusions.

Council out to lunch

MONTREAL (CUP) — The McGill student council recently voted by a slim margin to reverse a controversial position, and will now oppose all tuition fee increases.

The council's original position advocated a 300 per cent tuition fee hike in Quebec over the next three years.

"We're (council) seen as being out to lunch on this issue. I think we should return from lunch," said council member Randy Flemmings, speaking in favour of the motion.

Despite assurance from council vice-president Ian Drodie that the council's position in favour of tuition increases is becoming more accepted on campus, the council voted nine to eight in favour of the resolution.
