How do the roses die?

Do their leaves fall together,
Thrown down and scattered by the sky
Ofangry weather?
No—the sad thunder-stroke
O'ersweeps their lowly bower;
The storm that tramples on the oak
Reients above the flower.

No violence makes them grieve,
No wrath hath done them wrong,
When with sad secrecy they leave
The branch to which they clung.
They yield them, one by one,
To the light breeze and shower.
To the soft dew, cool shade, bright sun,
Time and the hour.

COMMERCIAL.

London Markets.

London, August 28, 1879. WHEAT .- During the past week wheat has come to hand pretty freely, most of what has been delivered being of superior quality. The market continues without change, all varities of fall wheat commanding much about the same price, from $1.55 to $1.65 per cental.

OATS—Have arrived in large quantities, and gradually dropped in value; 90 to 93c. were the prevailing prices to-day.

PEAS—Are very low in coming in, and are generally of so poor quality that no one looks upon them with any favor. One load to-day brought 80c., and this is the only load we have seen this week.

Barley—Has not done much yet, and the offerings are mostly of low grade. We quote from 80 to 90c.

HAY—Has been in very good demand

at $8 to $9.50 per ton.

POTATOES—Are plentiful with only a moderate demand

Apples—Are offered in large quantities, but find fair sale at 40 to 60c, per bag Butter—Has been more liberally offeres and consequently has weakened in race.
Still, the rates obtained are good for the Season.

EGGS—Keep pretty steady at 9 to 12c. per dozen, with a reasonable supply.

CHEESE —A flas market; 5½ to 6c. being usually paid on the Market Square for
