Mercantile Summary

IN THE "instructions" of an old and leading company to its agents, this paragraph occurs: "Branch stores should only be written upon when well managed, the applicants favorably known, and stock saleable, with a sufficient margin at the risk of the owner to induce care—(say only half value insured)." The inuendo in this extract is justified by the facts. An old resident of Canada, whose opportunities of observation have been good, declares that he never knew a retail merchant to succeed permanently who attempted to conduct several stores in different localities. There are exceptions, but this is no doubt the general rule; and the fatality for which these branch stores are noted is the reason why the insurance companies are shy of them. It is the old
